SATURDAY NIGHT THOUGHTS.

There may have been progress this week in the European war; but it is not of a striking character. The Allies have gained some trenches and a few hundred yards of territory. Just how that brings the end any closer it is hard to figure out. Experts may be able to prove almost anything from the signs of progress; but the civilian, who just reads the big heads, has his hands full solving any kind of a problem in connection with it, except that it is just what Sherman said it is.

The people of this country are simply concerned in seeing it end, that is the human beings; the munition makers are probably not particular, just so they can continue to gobble up the wealth of the world.

An interesting sight in this country is Mexico and the U. S. talking things over in a sensible way, trying to devise ways and means for advancing the interests of Mexico along physical and moral lines, and also to dispose of numerous little differences between the two countries. The work is going along well with the outlook of a result that shall be satisfactory to the world.

This week a democratic nominee learned that he had been nominated, and some more speeches were made. There was also a state election, that of Maine. It is about as easy to tell how Maine goes as Texas, so that the result there has been of little significance. Both sides have figured out a big advantage, which is politics.

One of the most interesting things about a big election are the claims of advantage made by both sides, something that has always been conspicuous, and always will be. Voters, very properly, are learning to do their own calculating, and have minds of their own in a very emphatic manner.

Oregon voters will have a good many things to consider before going to the election booth in November, numerous amendments being up for consideration. Perhaps there is nothing of more importance than those in connection with the prohibition law of the state, now in force since last January. There are two bills. One is for the purpose of making it stronger and more effective, undoubtedly the proper thing, and the other is to tear it to pieces, under what is called the brewers' amendment, one that would in a measure restore the saloon, at least the beer saloon, in Oregon. It ought not to take much investigation for voters to decide what is right in the matter.

MISFITS

These are days of blow. After listening to some men boost their city until it had wings, a listener remarked that it would be all right if it were only on the sea coast, which would be easy enough to secure, as they could run a pipe line to the ocean, and if they could suck as hard as they could blow it would be an easy thing to have salt water right at their doors.

Dimitracopoulos is the name of the new prime minister of Greece. Some papers think it is a joke to have such a name; but the name of the world's greatest orator, Demosthenes would be just about as jaw breaking if we were not used to it.

Scio News: Owing to physical inability to get about and smell out the news, the Tribune will regard it as a favor if any of our friends who know of an item of news, will tell us about it.

Deserve the Limit.

Judge Kelly says he has never sent a man down to Salem without feeling sorry for having to perform the duty. The Tribune knows some people whom it should send down there for an indefinite period. For instance: Those people who order the paper, take it for a year or two and then say "I did not subscribe for it," and refuse to take it from the postoffice.

The things that build up are the ones deserving promotion.

Whatever tears down character has nothing to commend it with the masses.

Politics is a great game of winning over the mistakes of the other fellow.

A Ford Tragedy.

Dorris Times: "August 23rd while

L. Chandler, who was in his Ford automobile, was racing with his dog that he got from Mr. Olsen, he collided with a cow. Not more than five minutes later he ran into Horalek's dog and killed it. In the race with his dog he was unsuccessful for it got into the sage brush and then went back over the hills to its former master.

School Day Humor.

"I intend to call Bridget to bring a fresh bucket of water," remarked the professor's wife.

"You doubtless mean a bucket of fresh water," corrected the professor. "I wish you would pay some attention to your rhetoric; your mistakes are curious."

A few moments later the professor said: "My dear, that picture would show to better advantage if you were to hang it over the clock."

"Ah," she replied quietly. "you doubtless mean if I were to hang it above the clock. If I were to hang it over the clock we couldn't tell the time."
