RAMONA A WONDERFUL FILM OF MISSION INDIANS

Accompanied by a special organ score based on themes from Wagner, Verdi, Beethoven, Schumann and Tschaiowsky, "Ramona," W. H. Clune's cinema production of Helen Hunt Jackson's famous novel of the old California missions and Mission Indians, will be seen at the Globe Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 18 and 19.

"Ramona" was produced in Los Angeles early last spring and for ten weeks it packed the largest theatre in the southwestern California city which lies in the very heart of the "Ramona" country. It was then taken to New York where, by the sheer beauty of its story and the wonderful sweetness of its musical score, it captivated a theatrical clientele, supposed to be impervious of anything not rife with sensationalism. Chicago was the next city to welcome "Ramona," and in the dead of Summer, with the terrific heat wave in full blast, the California maiden drew hosts of playgoers into the immense auditorium. Several other cities of California and the east have witnessed "Ramona," and in the five months of its career, the play is estimated to have drawn 2,000,000 spectators. Everybody is familiar with the general outlines of the story "Ramona." The publishers of Mrs. Jackson's novel announce that 3,800,000 copies have been sold.

LITTLE GIRL NEXT DOOR FINE FILM

One Portraying the Manner in Which the White Slaver Works His Trade.

One of the biggest crowds ever in the Rolfe last night witnessed the presentation of The Little Girl Next Door, a film suggested by the work of the vice commission of Illinois, with many actual pictures of the meetings of the commission and the state senate, and as well bringing in many prominent men, Champ Clark among others. It is a film that has a wonderful story, working for good, whose influence must certainly be one on the right side, a needed lesson for girls, easily influenced by strangers, calling for more care on the part of parents, as well as unflinching rules of propriety on the part of girls themselves. It is a clean film that can be seen by any one. The last time presented will be tonight.
