MAKING LAWS. A few weeks ago Hon. S. M. Garland, of Lebanon, delivered an address at Corvallis on the making of laws, which is worthy of study by people generally, for many people are not familiar with the process of law making.

The lawmaker, who has a very happy way of presenting a rather intricate matter, took his hearers on a hasty journey through the details of an election and organization of the two departments of the state legislature, explaining procedure step by step from the calling of the houses to order by the chief clerk, down to the smooth operation of the machinery under the masterful manipulation of an ever-on-the-job lobby.

In his frankness the speaker admitted that much of the preliminary program, such as the selection of the president of the senate, the speaker of the house and the heads of the important committees was decided upon at the Imperial Hotel, Portland, prior to the opening of the legislature.

"If a member has an idea," said the speaker, "which he wishes incorporated in a bill, he writes the bill, hands it to the chief clerk, who in turn passes it to the state printer. The next morning that will in proper printed form is placed upon the senator's desk. The bill is given a number and is thereafter known as Senate Bill Number so and so. The bill passes the first and second readings and is then referred to one of the 32 standing committees of the senate."

"In the meetings of committees, where this bill is considered, which meetings are usually held in the evenings, most of the work of the legislature is done. It is not on the floor of the senate or the house. The bill after careful consideration is reported back to the senate. The unanimous approval of a committee on a bill is a guarantee of its passage. If the committee is divided, both the majority and minority may make reports and in the discussion which follows the minority has both the first and last speech."

The speaker in describing the vicissitudes of one proposed law paid his respects to Senator Gus Moser, the champion of the ladies. The Portland senator was leading the fight for the passage of a law giving every legal voter, irrespective of his qualifications as a taxpayer, a right to vote at a school election. His desk was a perfect bower of flowers. The space behind the rail in the senate chamber was packed with school teachers who, in the words of the speaker, "were neglecting their duties as teachers to come down and lobby for this bill."

Senator Garland briefly traced the history of a bill which passed, one which failed, one which started with one idea and passed with the original idea entirely eliminated and a new one substituted, and the bill which had the joker in it.

The series of talks in the Business Men's Lecture course, of which this is the fourth, is growing in interest as was attested yesterday by the attendance of not only a large part of the student body but by a number of town people as well. These talks are held every Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock in room 329 Ag building. The public is invited.

DURING WILSON'S TIME.

There is plenty of work in Coos county now and there is no reason why anyone who wants to work should not find employment. Men are in demand in the many logging camps in operation throughout Coos county. The mills in North Bend are running and the shipyard is employing a large force. In all lines there is employment. The same conditions seem to exist at Gardiner, where men who come from there say they find plenty of work. It appears that if anyone is without a job of some sort right now it is because they are not looking very hard.—Harbor.

MISFITS

Glad the election is over.

City election next; but nothing serious.

After all it is worth while to see that good men are in the council and that good measures prevail.

Now that election is over we wish to remark that T. R. made a donkey of himself, with apologies to the donkey.

The most difficult time in the year to get out a paper is during the receipt of election returns, when there is a tremendous strain on the nerves.

Traffic on Salt River is very brisk today.

A good many are taking the trip who were SURE it would be the other fellow.

Of all fool things in the world nothing is much more so than to be positive in anything political.

Many a man has lost money he needed by betting on sure things.

Never buy stock that is sure to yield a big dividend.

College Poetry. (From the Emerald) Dobie: Veni-vidi-(vinctum??) Dobie had a little goat. He nourished it with care. He fed it on psychology— And thought it was a bear. Bez—he got his little goat. And with a 10 foot rule Found 'twas not a bear at all. But only just plain bull.
