NEED GREATER PRODUCTION.

In an address before the National Grange at Washington, President Wilson with his usual sagacity presented some thoughts of deep concern to the people of the U. S., and particularly the farmers. He said:

"We ought to raise such big crops that circumstances like the present can never recur, when men can make it appear as if the supply was short and when the middleman can charge for it what he pleases. It will not do to be niggardly with the world in respect to its food supply."

The president studiously avoided politics and foreign affairs, his only reference to the latter being: "I wish foreign affairs were as simple as agriculture." He urged that agriculture be converted from an occupation to a systematic business.

"Every nation in the world," the president asserted, "ought to come to us to learn how to raise big crops."

"It seems to me that some of the most interesting problems of our life and of the life of the world lie before us, problems in connection with which the farmers of the United States will play a part such as they have never played before."

"It goes without saying that the physical life of the nation has always depended upon the farm. It goes without saying, also, that to a large extent the physical life of the world has drawn its sustenance from the great areas of farm land in the United States. We have sent food to all parts of the world, and the American farmer has contributed to the life of all the countries of the world. But you know that as our own population has increased the proportion in which we could help foreign countries as contrasted with our own has decreased, and there are problems that are comparable with the problems of statesmanship lying ahead of the farmers of the United States."

"In the future we have got to bring more of the area of the United States under cultivation than is under cultivation now. We have got to increase the product at every point where it is susceptible of being increased."

"One of the things that has most interested me about what has been done recently by legislation for the benefit of the farmer is the question why it was not done long before. It is astonishing that the assets, the valuable, available assets, the visible assets of the farm should not have been available as a basis of credit in the banks on the same terms as the assets of commercial undertakings and manufacturing industry. Cattle are just as visible and tangible as goods in warehouses and goods on trains."

"We have liberated the credits of the banks, and we have mobilized through the department of agriculture the scientific intelligence of the world. With that combination every nation in the world ought to come to us to learn how to raise big crops."

"I wish that all problems of government were displayed in as clear lines of duty as this problem of government with regard to how the farmer ought to be treated is displayed. I wish, for example, that foreign affairs were as simple as agriculture. The great satisfaction about what you have to discuss is that when once your duty is determined we have got a great force or intelligence to go forward in the line of duty."

"The thing that makes a free country vital is the large number of people who get together to do important things without asking the leave of the government to do them. The striking thing about a great country, like the United States is that if the government neglected everything the people would do it; that you do not beckon to the people of the United States, they command you to go on, and things that are neglected they have got plenty of brains to get together and do for themselves."

Wilson carried thirty-three states and Hughes only fifteen. Guess he is entitled to be president.

New York and Pennsylvania with their 83 votes are not entitled to run the government.

A student at the O. A. C. is living high these days. Under a bet with another student for two weeks he is to have the desert of the other student as well as his own. This means that he will eat two pieces of pie right along instead of one, while the other fellow has none.

Busy days for the plumbers.

Hope Hughes learns that Wilson is president by Thanksgiving day, so he will have something to unite with the people of the country in being thankful for.

The straw vote is being whacked pretty lively; but, nevertheless, it has its merits all the same, and altogether indicated pretty well which way the wind was blowing.

The divorce business has become so popular in eastern Oregon that at Baker a mother and daughter are both suing for divorce. Both charge desertion.

Something besides measles are

Hughes has been asked to resign—Sam Hughes, Canadian minister of militia and defense.

Our Hughes needs to resign himself to the inevitable and be game.

There is talk of setting the clock ahead an hour in the U. S. to save time. Let's quit sentimentality and keep the proper time. You can't change time even if you change the clock.

Most people get up an hour too late anyway.

A few papers continue to throw mud just the same as if the election was not over.

A Riddle to Solve.

Riddle Tribune: Judge Geo. W. Riddle's new Buick Six was delivered here last week, but the muddy roads have not been attractive to the judge for a trial flight. However, he has been taking some lessons on the operation of the machine in the garage and may have us all dodging in case weather prevails.
