DIVERSIFIED FARMING

E. E. Faville of Spokane, Wash., editor of the Western Farmer, published at Spokane and Portland, while in Chicago, has some interesting things to say of the recent upward progress and development of Washington and Oregon.

"The rapidity with which these states have adopted a system of diversified farming and live stock raising has been wonderful," in Mr. Faville's opinion. "Especially has there been a marked increase in the growing of alfalfa and other forage crops—an initial step toward crop rotation and essential to the maintenance of soil fertility.

"The original impetus resulting in this economic advancement was imparted in 1913, when Professor P. G.
Holden, prominent in agricultural extension work, conducted 960 meetings in a territory embracing 225 square miles.

"At that time the Pacific Northwest was a buying region. Now it has an annual surplus of food and feeds to sell, and the importation of butter and dairy products has entirely ceased. In the last five years Oregon has increased the number of her dairy cattle 30 per cent with the Washington increase showing 40 per cent. The increase in other cattle has been much more marked, 120 per cent in Oregon and 370 per cent in Washington. Among the many other promising improvements may be mentioned a system of great terminal warehouses for the handling of the largely increased grain harvests and a better method of handling grain on the farms.

"Other fine movements have been set going also, as for example, that of better roads and the rural credit system just now receiving united attention from farmers and business men alike. As a result of all this intelligent effort, the earning power per farm in the Pacific Northwest has been increased to $4000—the highest in the country.

"Since better farming always leads to better homes and better people, a splendid school system, in which agricultural education plays an important part, has been built up. The percentage of illiteracy in Oregon and Washington is lower than in any other state."

Mr. Faville knows whereof he speaks when he commends the Chicago Herald Land and Industrial Bureau and Exhibition. And he knows the talks of the Pacific Northwest's remarkable gains.

MISFITS

About the most curious thing around is the gripe. It sneaks in unheralded, and is boss of the ranch before you are aware of the change.

You may not have the nuisance around for years and may think you are immune; but, listen, Mr. Gripe is no respecter of person, and with his contagious fangs may throttle you.

When once gripped proceed to take the advice of all your friends and fill your system with all the anti-gripe cures in the market and out of it.
They help to keep things stirred up more than a gossip.

The gripe is a thing not to be mon-keyed with, for left alone it is a good deal of a grave digger.

Take the first jolt and get a dr.

One cartoon shows Uncle Sam blowing a horn and yelling: "To Arms."

Rice is suggested as a substitute for potatoes. But there is no substitute. Just eat half as many. Most people eat too many anyway.

A recent misfit read: "1,000,000 boys short in U. S. without the end-seat hog." It should have been hogs short. The country has plenty of boys.

It is over in Europe where the boys are short, slaughtered for nothing but greed and malice.

Plenty of boys with hoggish proclivities that stay with them thru life.

Just now the porker is attracting the attention of the country because with all his beastly bad habits he commands an enormous price.

As a food you can't down the hog.
There's something a little different people like about the ornery animal that spends his life like some people, grunting while alive, and sizzling while dead.
