BREED YOUR SOWS NOW FOR FALL

All Gilts and Sows Should Be Bred to Bring Fall Litters to Increase Food Supply.

Washington, D. C.—Every breedable sow should be bred to bring a fall litter. It is important that all sows be used to increase the food supply and no sow should be carried over the summer unbred. Fall litters under common-sense management are profitable. The pigs should come in early fall—September and October—so that they may be weaned and have attained sufficient growth to shift for themselves before cold weather arrives. The earlier the pigs come in the fall the cheaper their growth will be made on available pastures and the stronger they will be to withstand the winter. The period of gestation for a sow is approximately 112 days, so that a sow bred on May 15 would farrow about September 5. This means the sows must be bred for fall litters during the months of May and June.
