

FIGHTING INFANTILE

PARALYSIS

New York, June 1.—Strict regulations to prevent another epidemic of infantile paralysis became effective throughout New York state today, exclusive of New York city, where the health board will act. The rules provide for a volunteer sanitary relief corps of experienced disease fighters and for strict quarantine of all suspected cases.

Dr. W. H. Lee Shows How Country Needs Trained Men for Future Use in War

(By Dr. Wallace Howe Lee, President of Albany College)

The great and increasing wave of patriotism has been sweeping across the country since the issuance of President Wilson's great war message. All classes, conditions and ranks of men have responded. The colleges and universities have made a noble and enviable record in this connection. Many have gone from college before the close of the year, and more are going. The colleges are in many instances so depleted as to interfere with the regular routine and shorten the year. In this connection one of the surprises to some people has been the importance recognized in college training. Many hundreds have gone from the colleges of the country to the Officers' Reserve Training Camps, to become the officers in the near future, when it is feared some of our present officers will have been sacrificed. It should be no surprise that college men are thus recognized. College education is one of the paths to leadership. College and university graduates ought to be fit as leaders, and they usually are.

Thus far today, but what of the morrow? More leaders are wanted than in the past days, more leaders will be wanted. The universities of Europe are largely closed and their students, professors and graduates have been sacrificed by the thousands on the altar of Mars. The colleges of America have been materially reduced in student attendance. Where shall the colleges look for the leaders of the next few years? Manifestly to the high schools. If ever there was one reason for the grammar and high schools and colleges to be maintained with large attendance, there are ten reasons that this shall be true in the coming year. Oregon, alone, has over 3,200 high school graduates this year. Some are intending to go to college. To them we would say, let nothing prevent. The country is crying for educated men and women. Others have thought to discontinue their education, and go into industries and mercantile pursuits. This is a mistake. The high school graduates are a selected lot of people. They are too young for conscription and at the very highest point of capability, in the preparation for the great things ahead. Leaders can't be grown overnight, nor can they usually be grown from people of no attainments. The high school graduates are under a definite obligation to their country to take advantage of the advance step which they have attained over others. It is a mistake for them to turn aside from a positive forward movement in educated development. Should they do that now, and drift into the war, they become privates, and lose the advantages thus far gained. Should they stay intensively and ambitiously in college they have opened before them the golden doors of opportunity, to a participation in the large events of history. These thoughts apply to both boys and girls. There never was such an opening before the boys and girls of America as today. They should either remain in college, or go to college, to supply the great deficiency that is surely ahead of this country, if the war continues.

The plea of Dr. P. P. Claxton, Commissioner of Education, along this line is urgent and timely. He pleads with young men and women to keep on now if ever. The desire of young women to serve their country is not confined to nursing. There is a greater call for equipped leaders in the next year than in the past five years. It is estimated that there are 190,000 women in the colleges, universities and normal schools of the United States. It is from this class that we are to expect to draw many of the leaders in the great movements of the immediate future. There are three times that number, not having enjoyed college education, who are capable, by nature and inclination, to serve the Red Cross, and enter the trades, industries and professions. Our supply of men and women leaders must not be cut off. A fearful gap is threatened ahead. Think of the great rebuilding processes that must be the program of Europe and America after the war. Who will engineer these? Manifestly the educated men and women of tomorrow. Of course necessary immediate service to the country is imperative, and has precedence, but the call of tomorrow is equally imperative, and for that we must make provision. The colleges and universities of the country must continue in full force, and must help students in the pursuit of an education. The 3,200 high school graduates of Oregon must not stop. It is a mistake to turn aside, for financial or any other reasons.

We plead with the young men and young women of our high school graduating classes this year, to give this matter serious and favorable thought, and to crowd into the colleges and higher institutions of learning in Oregon, that Oregon may supply five years hence, and ten years hence, her quota of consecrated, efficient leaders.

MITTS AND CALAVAN CHANGE THEIR OCCUPATIONS

V. L. Calavan, who has been teaching school at West Linn, opposite Oregon City, for the past two years, has purchased the interest of his partner in the firm of Mitts & Calavan, druggists, and Mr. J. F. Mitts, who has been operating the drug store for the past two years will go to West Linn and take up the duties of school teaching where Mr. Calavan left off. Both Mr. Mitts and Mr. Calavan are well-known young men and have many friends in Albany. Mr. Calavan was a former student of Albany College, was active in debate while in college and took a leading part in student affairs. After leaving Albany College he attended O. A. C., graduating from the college of pharmacy in 1912. He followed his profession up to the time of his leaving for Oregon City, and has kept in touch with the drug business at all times.
