FRANK CRABTREE HURT UNDER HORSE TUESDAY

Frank Crabtree of Crabtree, narrowly escaped being killed Tuesday when he was working on his farm and was trampled under one of his horses. He was working on the place when he fell into hole. One of the horses walked over him, cutting his face badly and breaking two ribs. He was brought to town and attended by Dr. J. P. Wallace. By only a miracle he escaped being under the other horse of the team he was driving, for no sooner had he pulled himself out of the hole than the other horse fell into it. He will recover.

VALESKA SURATT SURPASSES PAST TRIUMPHS IN "SHE"

Valeska Suratt surpasses her many former triumphs in William Fox's picture of Rider Haggard's famous novel, "She", the most elaborate photoplay ever released as a regular feature. It will be seen at the Rolfe tonight and Saturday.

Miss Suratt plays the title role, Ayesha, "ah-who-must-be-obeyed," a white queen of a savage tribe. She has attained immortality by bathing in the fires of the Flame of Life.

Three thousand years ago Kallikrates, a young Egyptian priest, is killed by Ayesha when he refuses to abandon his young wife for her. His widow gives birth to a son, whom she charges to avenge his father's death.

This solemn duty is passed on from generation to generation. In the present era its fulfillment falls on Leo Vincey (Ben L. Taggart), a direct descendant of the priest.

Leo sets out for the mysterious land of She. On landing in Egypt he meets Ustana (Miriam Fouche), a native girl. She kisses him, thereby coming his wife.

On entering the city with the girl Leo and his companions try to stop a cannibal feast. Leo is wounded, and his companion, Holly (Tom Burroughs), is hailed before the queen. She is Ayesha.

Holly implores She to heal Leo's wound. She enters his cave and recognizes in him Kallikrates. Holly warns Leo the queen is She.

From here on the action centers about "She", and gives rise to most intense and dramatic situations.

SENA OWEN STARS IN "A WOMAN'S AWAKENING"

Senaa Owen returns to the screen after several month's retirement to star in "A Woman's Awakening," a Triangle-Fine Arts picture directed by Chester Withey, which will be shown at the Globe theatre tonight.

Her role is that of a young wife striving to maintain her ideals though married to a rake who is enamored only with her fortune. No play produced at the Fine Arts studio in recent months has given a star a better opportunity for displaying the variety of her wardrobe. Besides a number evening gowns, Miss Owens wears a score of dashing street costumes, novel sport attire, chic riding habit and even dress male dress clothes for an adventurous expedition to a gambling resort.

The story, written by Frank E. Woods, deals with a young wife who discovers that she is married for her fortune. Her mother is an invalid, and the only friends in whom she can confide is a former admirer. One night as the husband is preparing to quit the house, taking with him the balance of the wife's fortune, he is murdered. The wife and the young lawyer, her former admirer, suspect each other, and the spectator is mystified until the startling revelation at the end of the play.
