WHY WORRY ABOUT DRAFT, GLANCE AT THIS

Atlanta, July 12.

Here is consolation for every man who has registered and expects to be drafted in the great war lottery this month. It comes from an Atlanta boy who has been on the firing line in France and knows what he is talking about:

You have two alternatives—either you are drafted or you are not. If not, you have nothing to worry about. If you are drafted you have nothing to worry about—you are in camp or you are at the front. If you are in camp you have nothing to worry about. If you are at the front you have two alternatives—either you are held in reserve or you are sent to the firing line. If you are in reserve you have nothing to worry about. If you are sent to the firing line, you have two alternatives—either you fight or you don't. If you don't you have nothing to worry about. If you do fight you have two alternatives—either you are slightly hurt or badly hurt. If slightly hurt you have nothing to worry about. If badly hurt, you have two alternatives—either you recover or you don't. If you recover, you have nothing to worry about. If you don't recover, then you are dead and can't worry.

So what's the use of worrying about the draft.—Waycross Journal-Herald.

PATRIOTIC POEM

Rise noble sons of a free-born nation
March beneath the folds of the Star Spangled Flag.
Raise her on high let the sea breezes fan her Go forth young heroes to conquer or die.
Brave sons of freedom with Pershing
to lead them,
Never shall yield to Teutonic foe.
Fighting for freedom who shall withstand them,
God will be with them wherever they go.
What, though the submarine lurk in their pathway
What, tho the trenches loom grim from afar
Hindenburg, Ludendorff, Crown
Prince or Kaiser,
Freedom's the object and nothing
can bar.
Theirs not to fail when the bugle is sounded;
Theirs to be ready to answer the call;
Shoulder to shoulder with sons of all nations
Fighting for freedom they'll conquer or fall.
Irish and Scotchmen, German and Frenchman,
Poles and Italians in gallant array Brothers in heart in thought and in purpose
Neath the Stars and the Stripes
they are marching away.

nical schools and colleges who are within the age limits of the selective draft should be treated in the same manner as the workers in the industries which are devoted to the manufacture of war materials. Under this ruling the presidents of colleges and technical schools may properly urge the district exemption boards to exempt students in their institutions who give promise of special aptitude for the technical and scientific professions until those students have finished their courses. I am bringing this matter to your attention with the authorization of the Secretary of War.

Our Allies have advised us in this matter from the fullness of their three years of war experience. President Van Hise of the University of Wisconsin who has been working in intimate relations with the Council of Defense, brought to the National Educational Association in Portland recently the views of the British government in the matter. He said that Foreign Secretary Balfour and the British Commission warned the American government against making the serious mistake that England made at the beginning of the war in sending her trained men to the trenches and neglecting to keep up the output of her colleges. They told of the serious results of the mistake from which England was now suffering in her lack of competent leadership for the many activities of the war.

The records testify to the zeal of college young men in the matter of enlistment. That their enthusiasm outran that of any other group, I doubt not. The country's welfare in war and after is menaced by the depletion of the colleges. Many more young men and women are needed in the colleges whether the war be long or short. The selective draft will now take to the trenches all that are needed there. There is as yet no draft to the colleges, but they offer a real patriotic opportunity for young men and women.

Albany College will begin a new year of patriotic work on September 18th.

TRICKS OF THE TRENCHES WHICH SAVE THOUSANDS

Expert Tells How Fake Orders, Dummy Soldiers and Feints Fool the Enemy.

There is an old saying that there are tricks in all trades. While arms can scarcely be called a trade, it has, according to Captain Leslie Vickers, author of "Training For the Trenches," innumerable tricks of its own, which have been responsible for the saving of thousands of lives. Captain Vickers outlines them in the thirteenth chapter of his little manual, that headed "Tricks For the Trenches."

"One of the best tricks is to let the enemy get hold of fake orders. These can be placed on bodies immediately after an action, and there will be a good chance of the enemy accepting them as genuine."

"Making elaborate preparations for an attack in one spot and then actually attacking from another point when his reserves have been drawn to the first point also used to work well."

"In the trenches it was sometimes necessary to move about the few men that we had and to keep them firing, first in one place and then in another, to convey the impression that we were in considerable force."

"Ruses had to be adopted to discover snipers. On one occasion I needed to find a sniper who had just killed three of my men and was such an excellent shot that he broke my periscope. For this purpose I made a dummy man out of sandbags and had a soldier put him cautiously above the parapet (head only) while I observed from a neighboring bay. I detected him from the dust that his bullet raised from his parapet, and a few well aimed artillery shots put him and his loophole out of business. My poor dummy was badly wounded in the process."

"The Turks in Gallipoli used to paint some of their snipers a green color and send them between the lines among the small bushes."

"A pretended retreat will sometimes lure the enemy from his trenches to destruction."

"Sending out patrols in one section to draw fire while careful reconnaissance work is being done at another spot will sometimes find him off guard."

"In short, the whole business is to get the enemy's goat. Keep him guessing. Wear him down with worrying. Break his nerve and spoil his sleep. That his physical resistance may be weakened. On the other hand, learn to estimate the intention of the enemy. Do not underestimate him. In all cases and under all circumstances follow out the excellent motto of the boy scouts—"Be Prepared."

GERMAN SUBMARINE INTELLIGENCE OFFICE LOCATED

By Arthur E. Mann, United Press Correspondent

Stockholm, July 11.—(By Mail)—Allied secret service and intelligence officers, with the cooperation of the police of the Scandinavian countries, have recently succeeded in unearthing and dispersing a large and well-organized German submarine intelligence office headquarters in Gothenburg, Sweden.

In their investigations the officers discovered a naval intelligence map of the waters surrounding the British Isles and the North Sea. The water area on the map was divided into small squares, each one numbered. An elaborate code was also found for use in conjunction with this map.

Messages based on this code, although apparently reading like private mercantile telegrams and cablegrams, could in reality be deciphered into accurate descriptions of Allied warships or of belligerent or neutral merchantmen.

From the spy headquarters in Gothenburg, agents were sent to Scandinavian ports and attempts were made whether successful or not, to get them into England. These agents were mentioned and were reporting to headquarters on the sailings of merchantmen. It is supposed that in some way the headquarters in Gothenburg communicated the information to German submarines at sea, probably by wireless stations hidden along the coast.

One of the chief branches of the Gothenburg office was in Christiania and a Norwegian was actually engaged there to go to England on the espionage service, being supplied with the code and map in addition of process of invisible ink writing for mail reports. Another branch was in Malmö, Sweden. It is believed that many of the agents of the German spies in Gothenburg were Scandinavians. At about the same time of the discovery of the Gothenburg office, a German giving the name of Klein was arrested in Sweden, charged with a plot to murder British Ambassador Buchanan in Petrograd. Klein was afterward released but was deported from Sweden.
