MINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY.

Seville Has a Treasure House Packed With Authentic Facts.

In the historic Spanish city of Seville, near the famous cathedral and occupying a frontage of about 200 feet, stands a building that is of paramount interest to the people of practically all the American republics. Because of the contents of this building Seville is becoming the Mecca of American historians.

The structure is a veritable treasure house of authentic facts concerning the colonial period of all the Spanish speaking countries of the new world as well as a mine of information relative to the early history of a very

RABBITS WERE KILLED; BOY LEAVES HOME

Disappointed over the loss of his rabbits, which had been killed, Melvin Kuthe, 12 year-old-son of G. W. Kuthe, put a note in the mail box last night saying that he was going to leave home and would never return. It is understood that he had made boasts to carry out his wanderlust before, but this time he started out in earnest. His parents state they know where to find him, and that after he has had his little trip that he will return home.

large part of the United States. The house is known as the Casa Lonja, and the treasures it contains consist of the general archives of the Indies, that wonderful collection of unpublished, unedited and for the most part even unindexed original documents, reports, letters, etc., which practically embrace the administration of the colonies under the dominion of Spain in all the Americas.

The mother country kept in very close touch with her children across the sea, and these detailed reports, contracts, cedulas and legal documents of every kind, as well as thousands of letters of officials—private and confidential as well as of a public character—form an almost inexhaustible mine of historical facts.—Exchange.

INSTINCT OF THE SPIDERS.

They All Knew How to Land When Cast Adrift Upon the Waters.

I took a large spider from his web under the basement of a mill, put him on a chip and set him adrift on the quiet waters of the pond. He walked all about the sides of his bark, surveying the situation very carefully, and when the fact that he was really adrift and about a yard from shore seemed to be fully comprehended he looked out for the nearest land.

This point fully settled upon, he immediately began to cast a web for it. He threw it as far as possible in the air and with the wind. It soon reached the shore and made fast to the spires of grass. Then he turned himself about and in true sailor fashion began to haul in hand over hand on his cable. Carefully he drew upon it until his bark began to move toward the shore. As it moved the faster he the faster drew upon it to keep his bawser taut and from touching the water. Very soon he reached the shore, and, quickly leaping to terra firma, he sped his way homeward.

Thinking that he might be a special expert and an exception in that line of seamanship to the rest of his companions, I tried several of them. They all came to shore in like manner.—Virginia Pilot.

LIGHTS OF THE NIGHT.

The Heavens Shine as Ever, While This Old World Changes.

Night is the astronomer's accepted time. He goes to his delightful labors when the busy world goes to its rest. A dark pall spreads over the resorts of active life; terrestrial objects, hill and valley, mud rock and stream, and the abodes of men disappear; but the curtain is drawn up which enshrouds the heavenly hosts.

There they shine and there they move as they moved and shone to the eyes of Newton and Galileo, of Kepler and Copernicus, of Ptolemy and Hipparchus—yes, as they moved and shone when the morning stars came together and all the sons of God shouted for joy.

All has changed on earth, but the glories of heaven remain unchanged. The play passes over the site of mighty cities; the homes of powerful nations are desolate; the languages they spoke are forgotten; but the stars that shone for them are shining for us; the same eclipses run their steady circle; the same equinoxes call out the flowers of spring and send the husbandman to the harvest; the sun paces at either tropic as he did when his course began, and sun and moon, and planet and satellite, and star and constellation and galaxy, still bear witness to the power, the wisdom and the love which placed them in the heavens and upholds them there.—Everett.

Its Class.

"Mac's story sounded ridiculously improbable, didn't it?"
"Worse than that; it sounded like a movie plot."—Life.

Children's Prattle.

At times it cannot be denied the questions of children become tiresome, but who would wish a child to ask no questions? Julius Sturm tells in one of his pretty fairy tales how a grandfather, driven into impatience by the constant questioning of his grandchild, exclaimed, "I wish your tongue were out of joint!" But when unexpectedly his wish was fulfilled and the child became dumb how he joyfully exchanged one of the two years which an angel had prophesied he was yet to live for the privilege of hearing the little one's prattle again!—Exchange.

A Bad Case.

The cynical man was staring through the window at the cheery man swinging down the street. "Does Cheery know anything?" asked his companion.

"Know anything?" said the cynical man. "He doesn't even suspect anything."—New York Times.

Wasted Energy.

It is none of our business, but it does seem that a porch climber wastes a lot of energy when he might just as well get in by a window on the first floor.—Arkansas Gazette.
