CULTIVATED LANDS BEST FOR FALL SOWN GRAIN Do Not Need Replowing But Can Be Planted with Drill After Disking

Oregon Agricultural College, Corvallis, Aug. 28—Cultivated lands make an excellent place for the sowing of fall cereals. There are thousands of acres of land in Oregon that have been sown to corn, beans, etc., that will produce fall cereals very profitably. The expense of plowing is eliminated, disking with a harrow being all that is necessary.

The fall sown or early spring planted crops are the surest of bringing results. The seeding should be finished soon but it is better to have the grain come up after the first frost in order to do away with the Hessian fly damage. The seed sown should be heavy, re-cleaned seed with a good germination percentage. After disking the land the grain can be planted in the usual way with the grain drill.

Wheat can be sown from September 25 to October 15 on the rich well-drained soils. Winter barley gives good results on the poorer soils of Western Oregon and parts of Eastern Oregon where the climate is not too severe. In the poorer drained regions of Western Oregon, gray winter oats do very well.

The shortage of food requires that the land be used to produce everything possible. The fall cereal crops give good returns with little outlay.
