His theory, which is backed by the endorsement of many large timber owners, is to put men into the timber when there is no danger of fire spreading, and burning out the natural fire traps that ignite upon the slightest provocation in extremely dry weather. Old snags surrounded by dead brush, piles of old dead logs, and similar objects in the forests should be cleaned out in the fall or spring, and millions of feet of timber would be saved in the summer.

FRANCE COMING AFTER AMERICAN TRADE

Paris, Aug. 10.—(By Mail)—France is preparing in a concrete way to switch her pre-war German trade to America.

Under the authorization of the French government the largest publicity and advertising corporation in Europe will try to interest American manufacturers in the great after-the-war market in France. One of the heads of this organization told the United Press that American producers will be asked to investigate French markets of every description.

"France is now looking forward," he declared, "Frenchmen realize that the country must have a big market immediately after the war where they can begin to stock up their more or less depleted stores. There will be no tendency to trade again with Germany. The French market then to a large degree, will be the United States. American manufacturers, hitherto have shown no great tendency to drum up trade in France. They took what came their way and let it go at that. Now we are going to try and interest them."

"France's forty million people, statistics show, have a purchasing power of sixty millions. That argument surely ought to appeal to the Americans."

A bureau to be established in New York will systematically distribute information and will not only give full reports on economic conditions in France but organize the distribution of American goods.

The Food of Thieves.

In the year 1740 a girl called Marie d'Abadie was hired as a servant in an inn at Pierrefitte, France. She was the daughter of peasants named Dominique Habas and Marie d'Abadie. A Bearnaise from the village of Boellh, whose name was Jean de St. Jean, stayed in this inn, saw the pretty maid, fell in love with her and on May 20, 1749, wedded her in the church at Assat. They had several daughters, the eldest of whom on Feb. 20, 1754, was married at Boellh to Henri Bernadotte, physician, son of Jean Bernadotte, master tailor. Their son was Napoleon's marshal, Bernadotte, who became king of Sweden and whose great-grandsons are respectively King Gustave V. of Sweden and King Haakon VII. of Norway.

Power of Eloquence.

A story is told of the great Irish orator, O'Connell. An attack had been made upon him in the house of commons. When O'Connell arose to reply his lofty brow was black with thunder and his arm uplifted as if to strike. Then, checking himself, he said "But the gentleman says he loves Ireland." Lowering his tone to the rippling murmur of a summer brook, he continued, "I have no words of bitterness or reproach for any man who loves Ireland." The pathos in the fragmentary utterance of the last word brought tears to the eyes of many veterans of the house.

A Curious Illusion.

People declare that they have seen a field of grass gradually change color during a shower of rain, thousands of mushrooms springing up before their eyes. This is an optical illusion caused by the rain beating down the grass. The mushrooms do not really spring up during a single shower of rain. They are there already, but hidden by the grass, and when the rain beats down the grass it exposes the hidden mushrooms.—London Mail.

Olive Oil.

When olive oil is good and fresh it is of a pale greenish yellow color, with little taste or smell, except a sweet, nutty flavor. Surprisingly to say, olive oil is not made from the seed of the olive, as in the case of most vegetable oils, but from the flesh or pericarp of the fruit.

Mending Hot Water Bottles.

To mend a hot water bottle use a patch such as used for auto tires. They can be had at any garage. Just clean around the puncture with gasoline, then apply patch.

Return from Lake—

F. M. Arnold and family and Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Cyrus have returned from a two-weeks' trip to Crater Lake and other points in southern Oregon.

It's An Old, Old Story and Was Told 2,000 Years Ago.

A wife's letter 2,000 years old was unearthed recently in the ruins of the Serapeum, the temple of Memphis, the great city of ancient Egypt. The letter was written by Isis to her husband Hephæstion, who had deserted her. There were two letters, in fact, the first bearing a date equivalent to July 24, 184 B. C. In them the wife reproaches her husband for neglect of his family, and, what is particularly interesting at the present time, she complains of the high cost of living.

Here are some extracts from the first letter: "Isis to Hephæstion, her husband. Greetings—If you are well and other things are turning out with you according to your wishes it would be as I perpetually pray the gods. I myself am in good health, and the child and all in the home make mention of you continually. When I received your letter from Ilium, in which you explained that you were in retreat in the Serapeum at Memphis, I immediately gave thanks to the gods that you were well. But that you do not return distresses me, for having piloted myself and your child through such a crisis and having come to the last extremity because of the high cost of corn, and thinking that your return would bring me relief, you have never even thought of returning or spared a look for my helpless state."—New York World.

THINNEST SOAP BUBBLES.

They Almost Give Us a Sight of the Invisible Molecules.

What is a soap bubble? Nothing but a film of water molecules held together by the cohesive power of soap in solution. A soap bubble's size and strength depend upon the right composition of the mixture that involves its material. The colors in a soap bubble are due to what is known in physics as the interference of light, and depend upon the varying thickness of the film of water.

It is a singular fact that the last color to appear on a soap bubble just before it bursts is a gray tint. The thickness of the film when this tint appears upon it is less than the one hundred and fifty-six-thousandth of an inch.

Were a soap bubble to be magnified to the size of the earth and the molecules magnified in proportion, then the whole structure would be as coarse grained as a globe of small lead shot touching one another at their surfaces.

In the blowing of a soap bubble there is presented the spectacle of the stretching of a liquid to the extreme limit of its elasticity. In this way we come nearer to a sight of the invisible molecules of matter than could be got in any other way no matter how elaborate the experiment.—Exchange.

Passport to the North Pole.

A passport to the north pole was issued some years ago by the governor of the province of Tolosak, which stretches along the Russian shores of the Arctic ocean. The official was approached by two men who had been engaged to proceed to the north with an English expedition then fitting out. Their petition was for a passport to the pole itself, but the governor pointed out that the pole was as likely to be in their home province as in any other, that it was extremely unlikely they would reach it and that if they did there were no police there to examine their credentials. At last, however, to satisfy them he ordered the issue of a document allowing them to pass without let or hindrance to the north pole.

Tower of London.

A royal palace, consisting of no more than what is now known as the "White Tower," appears to have been the beginning of the Tower of London. It was commenced in 1078 by William the Conqueror and finished by William's son, William Rufus, who, in 1098, surrounded it with walls and a broad ditch. Several succeeding kings made additions to it, and King Edward III, erected the church. In 1638 the old White Tower was rebuilt, and in the reign of Charles II. a great number of additions were made to it. The new buildings in the Tower were completed in 1859.

Collecting Antiques.

The little town was highly excited over the announced engagement of the nineteen-year-old widow to Mr. Henry "Why, Daisy," he best friend said to the young widow, "you're not going to the yourself to that old man? Why, he's three times your age! What are you doing it for?" "Oh, I can't resist having him!" said the young widow. "He does harmonize so beautifully with my antique furniture!"—Penny's Weekly.
