ALSACE AND LORRAINE MEAT CHEAPEST BUT—

By Heny Worod, United Press Staff Correspondent

With the French Armies, August 26—(By Mail)—The cheapest place in the world today to buy meat is precisely where the ordinary mortal might consider it the dearest—namely, in the German occupied portions of Alsace and Lorraine.

While meat in all other portions of Germany is selling at an average of 6 and 7 marks a pound, it is being sold, on the orders of the German government to Alsace and Lorraine at 10 cents a pound. The inhabitants of the two provinces are allowed to have it in any reasonable quantity and the great bulk of them are now buying and eating more meat than before the war.

While the motives of the German government in this matter are quite apparent, Swiss investigators who have recently looked into the affair and whose reports have just reached France, declare that the ultimate effects upon both the population and the meat supply of the two provinces will be disastrous in the extreme.

Under the system the German military authorities purchase from the farmers of Alsace and Lorraine all of their livestock at a very high price giving them in payment a governmental certificate, which, up to the present time, however, none of the farmers have succeeded in cashing.

The animals are then turned over to the local butcher who must kill, sell, and account to the military authorities for every pound. His report must provide for the disposition of all the meat at two marks a pound, which is the price established for those who are wealthy enough to pay it, and which is still several marks below the prevailing price in the rest of Germany.

To the poor, however, the meat is sold for 30 pfennings a pound, and the difference between this and the two marks is charged by the German military authorities to the municipal treasury of each locality. In some of the larger villages the municipal authorities are thus obliged to pay several thousand marks every week.

Iniquitous as this is from the standpoint of "high financing," Swiss investigators declare that it is by no means the worst aspect of the case. While the less than cost price at which the meat is being sold to the poorer people increases the consumption far above normal, the peasants and farmers, tempted by the high price which is paid them by the military authorities in certificates, are selling all of their livestock at a rate that in a few months must wipe out entirely the entire livestock of the two provinces, and completely ruin that industry.
