FIGHTING MR. HOOVER

One of the most peculiar forms that the pro-German propaganda has taken in the United States is opposition to the present food-saving campaign. Reports have reached the Council of National Defense that secret influences are at work in many sections of large cities telling the women that if they sign, they will be bound for war service. The trouble makers also argue that the poor are being urged to save food only in order that the rich may have more.

It is comprehensible enough that misunderstanding might arise regarding the government's food policy, especially among the more ignorant of our foreign population. But who would have imagined that there could be a deliberate conspiracy of misrepresentation directed to the wasting of food among the very people who will be most benefited by food conservation? Could anti-Americanism go further than this?
