SETTING THE PACE

Eliminating the anopheles or malaria-carrying mosquito from a 20-square mile area sounds like a big task, especially if there were only two months in which to do it. But the task wasn't too big for the sanitary experts who had it in charge.

Mosquito breeding pools and channel water courses were drained. Other pools were filled in. In yet other places the mosquito larvae were killed by pouring oil on the water once in every seven days throughout the breeding season.

The general public was induced to screen its dwellings more carefully than ever before. Cases of malarial fever were specially treated.

All this happened in Pulaski county, Arkansas, last summer before the first men arrived at the new army cantonment at Little Rock.

This vast mosquito war is only one small item in the sanitary measures taken in the extra cantonment district surrounding that one camp.

There was a sweeping and thorough sanitary survey. Every dairy in the region was inspected and cleaned up. There was a general improvement in cleanliness, in reporting and checking communicable disease. A large majority of the inhabitants were vaccinated for smallpox and typhoid.

Sewage systems were installed or improved, the water supply was made safe. The work was broad and effective. It included everything from private houses to ice cream parlors.

And Pulaski county is but one of the localities where such work was done. In the region surrounding every one of the cantonments and in places where smaller groups of men were brought together for military training, the sanitary survey and general clean-up covered several hundred square miles.

It is reported that health departments and civilian inhabitants in all these districts have responded to the work with a will. That may have been because of patriotism or the tact of the officials who are pressing ahead with the work. But as the results become evident, as health education spreads through those large areas, the inhabitants are going to be more ready and eager to meet the new requirements. And the sanitary wave will spread from the cantonments and the surrounding regions to cities and towns and country districts far removed.

Panama became an example and model for the rest of the world. These areas in which the government is now waging such successful warfare on communicable disease will soon be examples for the rest of the country. They are the foundations for a permanent public health achievement.

West Point's One-Man Football Team, Failure

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—(U. P.)—The fallacy of putting one star football player on a team and building with him the center—a sort of pivot around which contributing elements must revolve—never was better proven than in the recent game between the army and Notre Dame at West Point.

Elmer Oliphant was the army's pride and joy. He was the offense and he was the defense. In addition he mapped out the attack to be carried out by other players. He it was in justice to Oliphant that a man never rose to an occasion better than did the stocky Purdue graduate in his contest with the Notre Dame 11. He charged and smashed, sprinted, kicked and tackled. The Notre Dame team went to West Point primed and coached to stop Oliphant, but they nearly made a sorry mess of it, for Oliphant shattered their line and shook off their backs on numerous occasions.

But Oliphant was the whole team. The backs with him—Hahn especially—were a sorry set. When Oliphant was given the ball he was always good for something. Seldom was he downed behind the line of scrimmage, and most always he was able to break through for a good gain. Hahn never stepped across his own line of defense. Given the ball, he was able to make only desultory efforts at end running and was downed for losses. Likewise, quarterback Murrill was helpless. The army line was bad. The left side of it opened like a sieve when the Notre Dame forwards were flung against it preliminary to the only touchdown of the game. It was Oliphant, in fact, who nailed half-back Brandy after he had sprawled across the army goal line.

A great deal of credit for these happenings of course, must go to the Notre Dame team, for it was coached for just such tactics. In Gipe and Brandy Coach Harper showed the east as classy a pair as it has witnessed in many a day. And in Rydzewski, Behemoth center, he showed a center who has no superior anywhere in the country.

EASTERN OATS CONTAIN PESTIFEROUS WEED SEED

Two Car Lots Examined by College Students Show Impurity.

CORVALLIS, Nov. 27.—Eastern oats now being shipped to Oregon in car lots are of the No. 3 or No. 3 clipped grade which may carry considerable weed and trash seed. Two car lots from Minnesota while still on the track were examined by Prof. G. R. Hyslop and his class of farm crop students and showed dangerous weed seeds not common to many places in Oregon. Prof. Hyslop says that this stock is not fit for seed. Farmers wanting seed stock can get much better by inquiry of the state seed stock committee, O. A. C., Corvallis. Even if used for feed the seed may be scattered unless all stall litter is fully rotted before being spread on the fields.

One car was full of Canada thistle heads, wild rose, bind weed, French weed or penny cress and wild vetch or wild pea, as well as many other seeds. The oats came from a truck grass country and that weed especially should be looked out for.

The other car contained bind weed, wild rose, penny cress, numerous less dangerous weeds. All samples contained wild oats both in common and woolly forms.
