TROOPS IN BATTLE

Trained Soldiers Are Wholly Indifferent to Danger.

FACE DEATH WITHOUT FEAR.

Thought of Calamity Bother Them Not, and They May Be Severely Wounded Without Feeling Pain. Unique Analogy From Railroad Life.

The thought of not coming out of a battle alive rarely enters the mind of a seasoned soldier, and he goes into the conflict fired only with the sense of a patriotic duty to be well and faithfully performed, with perhaps a vague hope of promotion for a deed of bravery or daring. Very few people are afraid of a natural death, but a violent death is different, and yet hundreds of thousands of men have a need for practical certainty of death without giving a sign of terror.

Concerning the absolute indifference of the trained soldier to death in the midst of battle and the reasons therefor, Dr. MacKenzie employs a unique and graphic illustration from the railroad world.

"Let us imagine," he says, "that the brain, the organ that links up the body with the sources of thought and action, is a railway terminus into which run lines from all parts of the country. There are lines to and from the eyes, the ears, the feet, the hands and every muscle in the body.

"In the heat of battle trains loaded with messages are racing on the down line to every muscle. On a well ordered railway system certain trains have priority, while others are held back until congestion is relieved and some of the trains are cleared.

"A wise train dispatcher will see that a slow freight train does not get in the way and block the progress of a passenger express, and the mind working in this role takes care that no train laden with fear finds its way out of the terminus to throw the other traffic into confusion. There are no tracks to spare for such a cargo, the whole railway system is occupied with the supply of more urgent necessities.

"By a similar observation one can explain the frequently repeated statement that in the heat of battle a soldier may sustain a formidable wound and feel no pain whatever and even be unaware that he has been hit.

"The injured limb or organ discharges an express train along the line of some sensory nerve to the railway terminus in the brain, but on drawing near the terminus the signals are found to be against it, and it cannot force its way through the press of traffic into the station. It is therefore sidetracked.

"But just as an ordinary train will try to call the attention of the signalman by blowing its whistle when the signal is against it, so a sensation of pain may succeed in calling the attention of the brain to its existence by sending on a message not of pain, but of consciousness or pressure.

"This may have the effect of opening a path for the whole train to run through, and the wounded man begins to discover that he has been hit or hurt. But in most cases a long interval elapses between the infliction of the wound and the realization of the soldier that he has been wounded.

"I have been informed by a soldier who had a large piece blown out of his thigh that he was quite unaware of his injury for several minutes. His attention was attracted by hearing his foot squeak every time he moved it. On looking down he saw that his boot was full of blood; then almost immediately he felt a dull ache in the thigh, followed very shortly by a sensation of acute pain.

"In this case, to return to our illustration, the messages of pain from the wounded thigh had been held up by congestion of traffic near the terminus. We may imagine that the impeded train tried to call the attention of the signalman, but failed to do so until a message sent from the suburban station of sight, not far from the terminus, got through and informed the station master that a very important train from a remote part of the country was being held up. The levers were then at once drawn, and the sensation of pain passed on to the sensorium."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

HOME PRODUCTS WEEK RECOGNIZED BY GOVERNOR

This is Home Industry Week, and every Oregonian is urged to keep Oregon products in mind when making purchases. Every dollar kept in Oregon adds that much to the wealth of the state and helps in more ways than merely from a financial standpoint. At the present time the railroads are pressed for transportation facilities and every article that is made at home should be substituted for Eastern goods for this reason. It is a war measure and one that will bear fruit in the future.

There was never a time like the present to begin a "Made in Oregon" campaign. The necessities of war encourage buying home products and the attention of the people to their duty is called to the fact in stronger terms than ever.

The situation is of such importance that Governor James Withycombe has issued a proclamation declaring the week of December 3 to 8 Home Products Week, and urges all to participate. The text of his message is given below.

The slogan "Make One Present an Oregon Product this Christmas," is already bearing fruit, and thousands of people are following the suggestion.

On another page of this issue are the names of some firms making goods in Oregon, which are on sale at local stores.

The governor's proclamation follows: State of Oregon, executive department, Salem, November 19, 1917.

PROCLAMATION
 WHEREAS the State of Oregon is admirably situated and is generously endowed with many attributes and resources which encourage an limited development as a manufacturing center; and

WHEREAS, the world war, though unfortunate, furnishes Oregon many opportunities with an opportunity to impress upon the minds of local consumers, as never before, the names of Oregon brands, by reason of the fact that unprecedented orders incident to the war and the condition of the labor and material markets have placed many Eastern manufacturers in such a position that they are unable to accept business from the West; and

WHEREAS, it is not unpatriotic to make the best of an opportunity that has been forced upon us by laying plans to insure a permanent demand for Oregon-made commodities so that local manufacturers may, at all times in the future, have at least an equal footing with the Eastern manufacturers in competition for Western business;

NOW, THEREFORE, by virtue of the authority in me vested as governor of the State of Oregon, I, James Withycombe, governor, do hereby proclaim the week of December 3 to December 8 as Home Products Week, and urge each citizen of Oregon to place at least one Oregon product on his list of Christmas gifts this year.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the State of Oregon to be hereunto affixed this 19th day of November, A. D. 1917.

(Signed) JAMES WITHYCOMBE, Governor.
