pleased to cast anything but black glances on black opals and in consequence their erstwhile supposedly evil blight is quite ignored by fickle and fashionable females and the flashing hues of the black opals scintillate on their swan-like throats (some of them are more like pouter pigeons), on their heaving and oftentimes ample bosoms, on their lily and taper digits, and dangle from their shell-like aural appendages. Sundry content in the consciousness that they are smartly jeweled, they wear the opals without a shudder and as yet the list of casualties attendant upon such a desperate act has been slight.

Just why the blight of superstition should have rested on the gorgeous feathers of the peacock, that favored fowl of June and long the very trade mark of vanity, is a deep dark peacock blue mystery. This season sees the ban on peacock feathers lifted, however, as the fan of peacock feathers is admired. These fetching feather fans either mounted on jeweled and hand carved ivory handles or of the open and shut variety with tortoise shell or ivory sticks are the very acme of feather fan fashions for the fair.

Peacock feathers also have triumphed from jeweled evening hair bands or from the smart street turbans of metallic brocade and replicas of the entire bird gleam in wicked iridescence from the fascinating surfaces of the ubiquitous beaded bags.

In the face of such fickle shifting from superstition at fashion's call, it would be foolish to still cling to other superstitions, equally as innocuous. Why not banish the whole musty, medieval lot since Madame la Mode has bravely blazed the trail?

Most of the up to date maids and matrons have indeed adopted this logic for their own and ladders are now passed under dauntlessly by opaled and peacocky ladies. They turn back home to get something they have forgotten and leave again by the same door. They begin a new piece of knitting on Friday or Saturday without qualm and even start journeying on a fateful Friday. The 13th of the month has become a prime favorite as a wedding or an entertainment date and milady now cracks or breaks her vanity mirror with as little compunction as she does a masculine heart.

If that side of her profile happens to be the best Miss 1917 looks over her perfect left shoulder at the new moon with airy nonchalance even though the resultant good luck of landing her escort sometimes turns out to be bad luck.

So you see when Fashion turns against superstition, superstition might just as well get out of the fashionable picture without any to-do or fuss about it.

There's just one little weeny superstition that still continues to get by with it. That's the one of picking up pins. No matter how tight her corset or skirts, no woman will fail

"YOUNG MOTHER HUBBARD" AT THE ROLFE TONIGHT

If you want to be carried back to the days of the old swimmin' hole, cookie baking and other youthful joys, just see Little Mary McAlister in "Young Mother Hubbard" at the Rolfe tonight. This excellent comedy-drama will instantly lift the burden of many years from your shoulders, carrying you back to the days when you scorned shoes and stockings in summer.

Critics who have seen the picture at private showings in the Esany studios declare Little Mary has done the best work of her career in "Young Mother Hubbard." The child caught the spirit of her part perfectly, and carried out her role so well that she seems really to be an abandoned orphan, the character she plays.

The picture is intensely human, and has a heart appeal that will bring tears to the eyes of even those who ordinarily laugh at persons who cry over movie situations. On the other hand, there is a wealth of humorous situations to offset the pathos. The picture is so well balanced that the laughs come just in time to relieve the tenseness of the pathetic scenes, and the ending is so happy that everyone will leave the theatre with a smile of contentment.

"Young Mother Hubbard" depends almost entirely upon a group of children for its action. There are adults in the picture, of course, but they are for the most part in the background. Little Mary is supported by an excellent cast of juveniles.

to live up to the couplet—

"See a pin and pick it up
All the day you'll have good luck.
See a pin and let it lay
Then your luck will fly away."

—especially if it be a blackheaded pin because of course you can't buy them anymore during these war times. So there we are again back to the same old reason that you can't get away from no matter what you start out to write about. Even this measly little picking up pins superstition that still sticks in spite of fashion's ban is directly traceable to the great all-blamable reason, "on account of the war."

CITY NEWS

Forger Is Arrested—

C. H. McKey, alias C. H. Hoag, who is wanted in Roseburg for forgery, was arrested in Northbound train No. 18 yesterday noon by the local police. He was held for instructions from the Douglas county authorities.

Red Cross Auction—

Mrs. E. A. Hudson of this city is in receipt of a letter from her sister in Bedford, Iowa, enclosing a clipping from the home paper which tells about a most profitable auction for the benefit of the Red Cross. The idea may be worth something out here. The total proceeds reached nearly $4000 in spite of the fact that the day of the sale was cold and disagreeable. The sale was held from a wagon on the main street. One egg sold and resold, netting a total of $73. Numerous people bought the same duck, which netted a total of $94. The sale lasted two days, all the goods sold being donated.

To Attend House Party—

Miss Hazel Rolfe went to Portland this morning to attend a house party given by Miss Lorena Phelps.

Visited Elma Ohling—

Miss Daisy Leonard of Condon, Oregon, went to Portland this morning. She has been here visiting Miss Elma Ohling.

Returned Home—

Mrs. Blanch Gilbert returned last night from a several days' visit in Tangent with friends.

Visited Brother—

Mrs. R. T. King returned to her home in Portland this morning after a two weeks' visit here at the home of her brother, J. G. Medley. Mrs. King is a former Albany lady.

On Business Trip—

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Goings went to Salem this morning on business.

Went to Portland—

Miss Mae Lewis went to Portland this morning for a few days' visit.

New Ticket Clerk—

C. Brace has accepted the position of ticket clerk at the Oregon Electric depot. Mr. Brace has been connected with the Salem office for the past few months.

CHILDREN OF PIONEER

HAVE CHRISTMAS REUNION

Jonas Davis came to Oregon in 1845 and fought the battles of civilization in the West while the United States was getting a foothold on the Western side of the continent. Mr. Davis died at his home near Shedd Dec. 23, 1905, but his blood is still running in the arteries of a fighting man. His grandson, J. M. Dye, is in France, a member of the signal corps of the United States army.
