GOOD OLD WINTER

Cold Wave Makes Humanity Warm Up to Every One.

Zero Temperature Brings Out Divergent Discussion Around the Stoves in Favorite Meeting Places.

After all there's something fine and human about a good stinging cold snap. It seems to bring us closer together and cause a friendlier feeling all around. Most any of us are willing to let bygones be bygones before we get a square from home on a zero morning.

crowded car, or wherever folks are wont to huddle, like hibernating salmon, in zero weather, we find the best of fellowship. We hear of old winters in the seventies; we hear a lively exchange of views on the probable extent of the cold weather; we learn the inner workings of the homes of others; we're brought face to face with resurrected overcoats and muffs of doubtful vintage.

We gather highly illuminative information regarding the respective climates of the various heating systems; we learn valuable facts about the heat units of this coal or that; we find out who gets up first in the homes of others; we hear pitiful stories of destitution in how the pumps and water pipes have stood the sudden drop in temperature; we learn the thickness of our neighbors' underswear, and almost all there's somebody in the crowd who has just received a letter from a friend in Florida and we gain much interesting information about the climatic conditions in the Southland.

"We burned twenty-one tons of coal so far and we have a live in the dining room," says the blustering little man.

with an etele daughtin' from his gouter.

"We heat our house fine an' we're on our seventh ton of coal," says the tall, faithful clerk with a purple nose. "I let my wife run the furnace," says the frail bookkeeper with watery eyes.

"The only trouble we have is shootin' hot air in a southwest bedroom," says a tall man of commandin' appearance an' buckled overboots.

"I stayed at Aunt Ella's house last night. She has the steam heat an' her house is just like toast," says the narrow-gauged stenographer, with bare powdered throat, transparent shins an' postulous goat mitt.

"If you're goin' to heat a house, you've got to burn coal. I don't care whether it's steam or hot water or hot air, you've got to hosen up an' pile on the coal. I never knowed that till this winter. We used to spend our winter evenin's in the nickel theaters," says a round, positive feller, wearin' an old reversible ulster.

"Your friend is right. You've got to have a fire. You can't put any of that economical stuff over on a furnace. No economical wife ever made a good cup of coffee. There's two things you've got to use liberally if you want results, an' them's coal an' coffee," says a fierce lookin' man with thin red whiskers an' a prehistoric fur cap.

But zero weather clumps an' crowds are allus friendly, for there seems to be something in the cold, bitin' winds that warns us to keep off o' politics an' confine our observations to the more homely topics.

Climbers Imprisoned Atop Fuji.

The wisdom of erecting huts on Fuji for refuge in case of sudden storms of snow and rain was proved recently when a violent fall of snow and hail burst upon the crest of the sacred mountain. During two days more than 10,000 climbed the mountain and sudden arrival of the storm caught several hundred of them upon the hilltop. They sought safety in the numerous refuges. When the storm burst the police compelled all excursionists to wait for better weather at Gotemba and Tarobo. Relief parties were sent out but were unable to get through the drifts. Anxiety was felt for the food supply, but the adventurers came down safely. For two days the people in the snow were inccommunicado, owing to the destruction of the telephone wires. These will be buried before next season.

Jerusalem's Great Walls.

After 1344 Jerusalem was under the rule of the sultans of Egypt until the year 1517, when Selim I conquered both Palestine and Egypt, taking the title of caliph, and carrying off the sacred banner of the Moslems to Constantinople. Selim's son, Suleiman the Magnificent, once more built the great walls about Jerusalem. These walls of Suleiman are the present fortifications of the city. But the great walls of Suleiman the Magnificent are only the last of a long series of walls which, time after time, have been built only to be destroyed. The most tragical destruction not only of the walls, but also of the whole city, was that which was carried out by the Roman armies of Titus, in the year 70 of our era, in the reign of the Emperor Vespasian.

Only a pro-German or a misinformed American will scoff at the efforts of the government to conserve the food supply of the nation.
