BROTHERS TWO

R. A. Walsh, who directed the William Fox comedy drama "This Is the Life," and George Walsh, who starred in the picture, are brothers. They have made several pictures together for William Fox, and the combination has always produced extraordinarily clever screen plays.

And moreover, they get along together like two peas in a pod. George likes his brother's ideas and R. A. thinks George is the most active actor in filmdom.

Their play, "This is the Life," will be seen at the Rolfe Theatre Wednesday for a two days' run.

Called to Portland—

Mrs. H. A. Leininger went to Portland this afternoon, called there by the death of her brother-in-law, C. W. Dofflemeyer, who died this morning. Mr. Dofflemeyer is well known in Albany, having visited here at the Leininger home a good many times.

Returned From LaGrande—

R. A. Hudkins returned home yesterday from LaGrande, where he went to see an uncle who is seriously ill. W. Hudkins, who went with him, remained for a longer visit.

Enlists in Army—

Steve Young, of Seio, will be inducted into the National Army today and will be sent to Camp Lewis. He has applied for admission in the engineer corps, and will probably be assigned to that body upon his arrival at the cantonment.

Junior Red Cross—

A junior Red Cross is being organized in all grades of the Albany public schools and one period per week is set aside for the work. Each child is expected to contribute 25 cents to the war fund and in some of the rooms every child has contributed to the work.

TORPEDOES ON FOUR WHEELS

Explosive Propelled Toward Enemy Trenches and Controlled by Means of Wires Attached to Works.

La Domenica Del Corriere, Italy, reports a new war device, the invention of an English engineer, Stafford Talbot. Literally, it is a torpedo on wheels which may be propelled toward the enemy trenches and controlled from the starting point by means of attached wires.

The explosive is mounted on a metallic box which rides on four wheels. Attached to the box is a contrivance consisting of a dynamo which propels the wheels. The entire machine is electrically controlled, permitting the explosion of the charge at the desired moment.

Two parallel wires connect the torpedo with the control station. These are carried on spools and unwind as the machine advances. The power is derived from accumulating batteries at the starting point. When it is desired to fire the charge all that is required is to push a button. According to the inventor the total cost of this contrivance is about $150.

What He Wants for "Plain Food."

Do you know this man, have you ever heard of him—the man who likes plain food? His tastes are of the simplest; a little clear soup yourself, clear consommé the color of pale sherry. Take a knuckle of veal and four pounds of lean beef. . . . goes the sympathetic recipe. (Notice, you "take," you don't "buy.") "Fry, to a tender brown, carrots, onions," etc. So goes on this tender, delectable process until you finally "clarify." The time the cook spends upon the simmering, the frying, the clarifying, and the straining is not of course taken into account. "The man who likes plain food enjoys roasts of meat, joints and rib-roasts,"—Exclamation.

Chemistry Recognized Science. Chemistry has been accorded an almost formal recognition as the science at the heart of modern warfare. The British ministry of reconstruction has pointed out that Germany selected the chemical industry for special nurture in making its war preparations, especially that part of the industry dealing with coal tar derivatives, in which field the imperial government gradually won a temporary world monopoly. The minister of reconstruction has appointed a committee of six chemists to investigate the situation in England and to recommend a plan for making the British chemical industry self-sustaining and equal to any call upon it during and after the war.

DON'T FRET ABOUT TRIFLES

Magnifying Petty Mistakes and Tramples Weakens One's Ability to Master Bigger Problems.

Some of us rather overdriven women get into a habit of magnifying the petty mistakes or troubles of disagreeable events of the day, the business day, and making them out very big and terrible. The result is a loss of energy, for magnified troubles bring worry and anxiety, which is a sort of poison to the mind and even to the body, writes Jessie Roberts in the Houston Post.

Don't hang on to the mistakes of yesterday. Today's will be easier to manage if you haven't that drag on you, and by a little more firmness you can soon get to the point when the annoyance of the moment gets itself settled in that moment and then is dropped.

We would think it a fool thing to feed our body poison, even in the minutest particles; but we feed our nerves poison, even though it be in small quantities, when we deliberately fret and worry over small things, making them huge and important by the mere turning of them over and over.

These are strenuous days. Don't weaken your strength by unnecessary and harmful fretting over trifles. After you have done whatever can be done to remedy what has gone wrong, turn your mind away from it. Refuse to be dominated by small mistakes. Few of us by the way, are terrified by a really big thing. We rouse up and meet it definitely and firmly, unless we have a yellow streak. But the small thing often breaks down our nerve—and then our nerve.

Preserving Old Furniture.

Processors of antique furniture should devote regular attention to it, and especially to any of old oak, which should be kept in condition by periodical rubbings with flannel dipped in a mixture of beeswax, oil and spirits of turpentine. White painted French furniture is best cleansed with paraffin; and after old mahogany has been gone over with a very little sweet oil any spots or stains may usually be worked off or blended into the wood fiber by working an oxalic acid and water dampened cork over the surface of the blemish. The brilliancy of the gliding of old furniture, mirror frames and candleabra may nearly always be speedily restored by being sponged off with sulphur which has been boiled for fifteen minutes in company with several bruised parties, or with a preparation of common salt, alum and purified nitre, such as any druggist will supply.

Remember the Wheatless and Meatless Days and keep them wholly.
