ARMY WASTAGE

British casualties reported for the week ending Jan. 21 were 17,043, divided as follows: killed or died of wounds—officers, 76; men, 2,277; wounded or missing—officers, 213; men, 14,477.

There was no battle mentioned in the week's war bulletins. There was hardly anything said about fighting of any sort save a little skirmishing to the north of Jerusalem.

And that was a small figure for a "quiet week." The week before the casualties were about 25,000, with no engagements of special note.

It's a good indication of the wastage that goes on day after day, week after week, month after month, in this great war. The British army is the only one that gives regular and complete reports of its casualties.

Nearly all of this daily wastage is the result of "attrition," the military strength ground off the British army by steady and unobtrusive rubbing against the enemy.

The same thing must be happening to the French army and the Italian army, continuously and everywhere. There is no stretch of line devoid of losses.

And the German army, too. There lies the real moral of these laconic reports. It is inconceivable that the Germans on the British front set off any more easily than the British.

It is little wonder that German public sentiment is described as desperate. All the evidence at hand tends to show that Germany is far more nearly "bled white" than any of her major foes.

Germany may break sooner than any of us think. And if we do not want to await that slow, systematic sapping of her strength to the collapsing point, a day will surely come, and that not long distant, when a great allied blow with the United States bearing a big and honorable part, will bring the Teuton giant to his knees.

"How fluently those dear ladies do knit!" remarked an elderly intruding male at a war knitting bee.

If you can't buy sugar, just hark back to the good old standby of our forefathers—New Orleans molasses. It may not taste quite right in coffee or tea, but it has its merits just the same.

SAGE TEA TURNS GRAY HAIR DARK

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Bring Back Color and Lustre to Hair.

That beautiful, even shade of dark, glossy hair can only be had by brewing a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Your hair is your charm.

Don't bother to prepare the mixture. You can get this famous old recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients in a small, all ready for use. It is called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound.

Everybody uses "Wyeth's" Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair has disappeared, and after another application it becomes beautifully dark and appears glossy and lustrous.

It's no longer necessary to go into the details describing the practical merits of the Ford car—everybody knows all about "The Universal Car." How it goes and comes day after day and year after year at an operating expense so small that it's wonderful.
