STRONG FRANCE

The myth of a France "bled white" and ready to succumb is once more given the lie. A correspondent of the New York Times, after exceptional opportunities to observe the French people, the French government and the French army, writes: "The improvement in eight months has been extraordinary. I can say without exaggeration that in the whole allied wall of resistance to German aggression France is the hardest and most solid part. Last May there was demoralization. America's coming sustained France until she could recover herself. By her own recuperative powers she has now become stronger than at any time since the war began. With Clemenceau at the head of the civil government and Pétain in military command, France is rock-ribbed against all that Germany may attempt."

The evils in French politics, he says, are superficial. They have not affected the real body politic. "The French people are morally and intellectually sound and solid. America may rest assured that no political event will cause the slightest weakening in the French war will. The only doubts that existed at any time were about the civilian power of resistance, and these may now be dismissed unconditionally."

"The French army is better today than ever. No one has the remotest fear about the French front. Let the Germans come as strong as they will, the French will take care of them. The confidence of the army in its leaders was never before so absolute."

This is good news. It bears the stamp of truth. And it is no more than we might have expected from our knowledge of the unconquerable soul of France.

Gen. Pershing has forbidden his soldiers to purchase pies. But it's no great hardship. The pies they'd been buying were native products, neither pumpkin nor mince.
