DON'T WORRY.

As the big German drive goes on there are certain facts that every American should keep clearly in mind, in order to interpret the war new Local territorial gains matter little It is almost inevitable that some gain should be made by every powerful attack. Either side can gain almost anywhere, any time it cares to pay the cost in shells and men. Any given success may look bad in the headlines or on the map, but it isn't ephemera dlines or daily battle maps that are going to win or lose the war.

It's loss of men, not land, tha counts. The allied strategy is calculated to put out of the game as many Germans as possible, at a sacrifice of as few allied troops as possible. And unless there is express word to the contrary, we may safely infer, when ever we read of an allied retreat, that there is no real loss—that lost land has merely been traded for lost Germans. What looks like a defeat may often be a victory.

The war is not being won or los this week, nor this summer, nor this year. And time is fighting on our side. The German forces are waning as ours are waxing. Our allies will grow weaker at no greater rate than Germany and Austria will. And we ourselves will grow steadily stronger should come. Suppose that the Ger-mans should take Paris or the channel ports, or both. That would not en war. They would still have to reckon with the great armies we are new preparing. The overwhelming strength of the combined British and American navies would still dominate the seas, would still keep the Teutons bottled up, would still enable us to land huge armies and sweep back the

We need expect no catastrophe We need not expect any very serious menace, despite the strength of the German army and the despairing determination of the German leaders. But if they should "break through," there need be no panic. The end is sure There's another year coming, and that will be America's year.

Getting Along Nicely— Mrs. Arch Gould, who was operated on a few weeks ago, is now at her home and getting along nicely.

NOTICE

The federal food administration for Oregon and Linn county calls upon every householder to surrender at once to the local retail stores whatever wheat flour they might have in their possession. Flour will be received in any quantity, even if the sacks are broken and partly used.

The state of Oregon is going on a wheatless basis, beginning with June I, and every citizen is called upon to assist our government to the utmost of his ability during this great struggle for world-wide democracy.
