Scio Girl Suffering

by Peculiar Accident

SCIO, June 10.—(Democrat Special Correspondence)—Ester McKnight, three-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Don McKnight, was nearly choked to death yesterday when a War Savings Service badge became lodged in her throat.

Not until she was limp and black in the face was her father, who was not in her presence at the time, aware of the child's condition. They immediately summoned a doctor and began working with her and in a few minutes succeeded in dislodging the badge. The doctor states that if the pin, which is of considerable length, was up there will probably be no serious results.

FIRE PREVENTION
SEASON IS OPENED

Forest fires interfere seriously with the pleasure of summer touring in the mountains. Fallen trees obstruct the roads and trails and hinder travel, while the smoke clouds cover the scenery which gives the mountains so much of their charm. Most forest fires are the result of carelessness and might have been prevented. When everyone who visits the woods is careful with fire the annual loss of timber and forage will be reduced to a minimum.

The cooperation of forest travelers to prevent fire is earnestly requested to keep the mountains green, to save the forest resources for the nation's use, and to make the calling of men from industrial work to fight forest fires unnecessary.

Another Triumph for Woman Farmer.

Once again the adaptability and skill of women have confounded the critics—those incredulous critics, the farmers. They admit that in the recent efficiency tests at Maidstone, England, a very high standard has been reached. In the milking competition more than one-fourth gained over 90 marks. Two women thatchers, who had only been at the work for five weeks, secured the highest possible rating. The competitions were arranged by the Kent woman's agricultural committee. Mrs. F. Heron-Maxwell, chairman of the organizing committee, said there were 9,000 women registered as land women in Kent, also 300,400 members of the "woman's land army."—Woman's Century.

IF WORLD MOVED FASTER

Existing Conditions Would Be Very Greatly Upset by Increased Rotation, as Shown Here.

Conjecture has often been made as to what would happen if the earth were to rotate faster upon its axis than it does. Of course, if it went 18 times as fast as it does now, bodies at the equator would weigh nothing—a person would jump up into the air and fall to come down again. A man might weigh 200 at the poles and nothing at the equator, while his weight would vary for intermediate points. If he approached the equator he would get lighter and if he receded from it he would get heavier. A man could carry a house on his shoulders very near the equator, while near either pole he could only carry what one can now. On this account labor would be very dear near the poles and very cheap near the equator. It would certainly be interesting to know which section of the earth would be more populous—whether everyone would go north for good wages or go south for cheap workmen. The railroad problem would be momentous unless the railroads all ran east and west, when a uniform rate would obtain on any particular east-and-west line.

Journeys to the south would be even more popular than they are now, for they would make everyone feel better and in buoyant spirits; more springy, too, so that people could walk farther without getting tired, and could jump over any obstacle that presented itself without coming down with too hard a thump.

There is no planet now known that has such a rapid rotation as is pictured here, but there are several where man would weigh a great deal less than on earth. On the moon a man would weigh only fifty or sixty pounds and could jump as many feet without suffering serious discomfort. But this state of affairs obtains over the whole planet, because it is due to absence of gravitative force and not to centrifugal, as would be the case on the rapidly rotating earth.
