Oregon Fuel Conditions Indicate Big Shortage

PORTLAND, June 15.—(Special)—The wood fuel in Oregon is rapidly reaching a point which indicates there will be a shortage this winter, according to reports reaching Fuel Administrator Holmes. How severe the shortage will be is unknown now. Anticipating it, Holmes already is preparing for distribution of coal in districts with insufficient wood supplies.

Conditions are more acute in Portland than at other points thus far. These industries are converting their plants to the use of wood and coal, due to the fact that the oil fuel will soon be deeply cut on account of the transfer of tank steamers to the Atlantic, among other things. Announcement to this end is already having effect on demands for other fuels, with the result that dealers are having a hard time to fulfill orders now on their books.

SEE THE RESCUE FROM QUICKSANDS

A rescue from treacherous quicksands is one of the exciting feats performed by Bert Lytell in his initial Metro All-Star Series picture, "The Trail to Yesterday" which will be shown at the Rolfe Theater tonight. This picture is a novel of the rugged West is replete with thrilling situations. For the success of this rescue scene the cooperation of Anna Q. Nilsson, Mr. Lytell's leading lady, was necessary. Fortunately, Miss Nilsson insisted on carrying out each detail of the hazardous proceeding, declaring that a sense of fear was left out of her makeup. Bert Lytell accomplishes this rescue with a lariat, showing his skill in the art of throwing a lasso.

Masek Opposed to the Proposed Bee Ordinance

Editor of Democrat: I understand that a petition has been presented to the city council signed by eight residents of the city requesting an ordinance prohibiting the keeping of bees within the city limits.

I have invested in the bee business $350 and will be forced to abandon the business entirely in the event the ordinance is passed. My bees are of the Italian variety and bother no one as this particular kind of bees never bothers people like other varieties.

The petition which was presented was, with one exception, signed by people who do not reside in my section of the city and I am satisfied was circulated because of personal enmity towards me. In war time it seems to me that we should conserve on food and it is no time to ruin an industry of this kind unless the conditions warrant it. FRANK MASEK.

SENATOR MILLER SPEAKS AT CRABTREE

Many Attend Commencement Exercises of Local Schools of That District

CRABTREE, June 16.—(Special)—Union High No. 1, Crabtree, first commencement exercise and program presented by the school was well received.

The school was standardized during the year, Supt. Churchill having come and accepted the standardization as 100 per cent.

Crabtree people turned out en masse at the commencement exercises. The crowning feature and climax was the masterly address of Senator Miller, who spoke of schools and their advancement of recent years and encouraged further progress. Then he took up the present world struggle and handled same in a very pleasing, intelligent and effectual manner.

He showed our democratic tendency as a people and the almost unanimous desire to avoid war. He not even was willing to have a small army. But the acts and deeds of Hohenzollernism compelled us as self-respecting citizens to defend ourselves and eventually plunged us into the world's slaughterhouse. He seemed familiar with every detail and presented a very vivid portrayal of the entire situation. All who heard him are proclaiming his effort as the best and most masterly ever heard on the subject.

The following program was presented:

FIGURES LONG IN HISTORY

Stirling Castle Inseparably Connected With All That the Scottish Heart Holds Dear.

Recently the English government sent some German prisoners of war to Stirling castle. The ancient fortress is again a prison; again the "eye of the north" keeps watch over the nation's safety. Stirling is only a few hours' ride from Glasgow, but it is a journey from the nineteenth century to the middle ages. The castle, on the right bank of the Forth, is built on the highest tip of a promontory, close to the edge of the crag. Its position is almost impregnable.

On the north and south a rolling plain stretches away to the foot of the Ochil hills, below the Forth winds silver across the plain. On the east and west the water protects the fortress. The key to the highlands, the bulwark of the north, Stirling was for centuries Scotland's main defense against the invading English.

Much history has been made on the plain at the castle's foot. The German prisoners from the ramparts can view the scene of seven important battles. On the northwest on the top of a high hill stands a statue to William Wallace. At the foot of the hill was fought the battle of Stirling. Just inside the curve of the Forth is the field of Cambuskenneth, where in 843 the Scots defeated the Picts. Falkirk, where Wallace was defeated, lies to the south. Years later on this same field Prince Charles won one of his most important battles. Bannockburn, the holy ground of Scotland, lies to the south. From the castle you can see the center of the field, the Borestone, marked by a tall white flagpole.

Mary of Scots was crowned in the castle hall. Her son, afterwards James the Sixth, passed his baby days here. The iron bars at the windows of some of the rooms were placed there to protect the tiny prince from kidnappers. Years afterwards he was crowned as king in the same walls. John Knox preached the coronation sermon.

Advice for Would-Be Flyers.
The secret of the whole game of learning to fly is, I believe, never to get excited. I have seen beginner after beginner smash when he was first sent up to fly. They run along the ground, pull back the stick, as told, and a moment later are so astonished to find themselves 20 or 30 feet off the ground that they can think of nothing but shutting off the throttle. Many crash down tall first, with controls in climbing position to the last. If they would simply think—

"Ha, old boy, you're in the air at last—some thrill, but the main thing now is to stay here a bit and then ease down without a crash. Ease the stick forward—now we have stopped climbing. Feel that puff—she's tipping, but a little stick or rudder will stop that. Now pique her down, and reduce the gas a notch or two. Here comes the ground—straighten her out; too much, she's climbing again; there, cut the gas—a little more—there—not a bad landing for the first try."—C. B. Nordhoff in the Atlantic.

Food Waster Rebuked.

The man who went into a Dallas (Texas) hotel dining room and complained because sugar was rationed probably believes now that it would have been more sensible for him to eat what was set before him and say nothing. When he was told sugar was scarce the man broke up two rolls into bits and threw them on the floor. Inside of an hour a committee waited upon him and he was told to buy a Red Cross button, apologize to the waitress for rudeness and write a letter daily to the Dallas council of defense as long as he remained in Texas, so that his movements could be followed. The man showed that he was sorry for his display of temper and it is not believed he will waste food any more.
