PLAYING AT GOVERNMENT

Illuminating accounts of conditions in Russia are given by Italian soldiers who were in that country until recently as war prisoners, and are now touring America. They tell particularly amazing tales about Siberia.

Every town, they say, is a separate and independent government, taking orders from no higher authority, and having a revolution of its own every few days.

The spirit in which they conduct public affairs is shown by this picturesque incident. In one town there was a change of government every time a new group of debaters made a better impression in the public forum than the heads of the existing administration. One day the population turned out and submitted the fate of their republic to a three-cornered debate. A Kerensky speaker made a fine address, and the crowd voted for him. Then a Bolshevik orator spoke, and the crowd voted for him. Finally the third speaker, an independent, got up in disgust, and shouted:

"You are a lot of blockheads. You cheer one man with all your might, and then you go wild over another man who says just the opposite. Have you no brains? What is the matter with you, you ignorant asses? Russians can never be anything but a pack of fools when they act as you do."

That made such a hit with the crowd that the speaker was immediately elected head of the commonwealth, and borne off in triumph on the shoulders of the populace.

A great empire broken into a thousand fragments, and every fragment a crowd of irresponsible children playing at government—that's Russia.
