MILLIONS IN ARMS

We have more than 800,000 men in France. We shall have more than 1,000,000 there by July 1. These estimates are from official sources and if they err at all they err on the side of underestimate rather than exaggeration.

That is a small part of the story. Marshal General Crowder announces that we shall have 3,000,000 men under arms, here and overseas, by the first of July. They will include 1,000,000 volunteers and 2,000,000 selective service men.

By next January, according to similarly modest estimates, we shall have no less than 1,500,000 men in France. That minimum, be it noted, allows for the shipment of only 500,000 in the last six months of the year. We have been shipping troops lately at the rate of 200,000 or more a month. Perhaps we can do better than the promised 1,500,000.

By next January, too, it is now stated, we shall have a total of 4,000,000 under arms at home and abroad. By this time next year it is fair to assume, at least three-fourths of that number will have completed their essential training. If so, we shall probably have, making due allowance for wastage, an army of somewhere near 3,000,000 in France next June.

Maybe the army will be larger than that. The present shipping outlook and the smooth working of our soldier factory give good grounds for optimism. Who, in the light of recent triumphs, can set a limit to the next 12 months' achievements?

We reckon our army already in terms of millions. There will be more and more of those millions until Western Europe swarms with Yankees in khaki. They will sweep over Germany as the locusts swept over Egypt.

SOLDIER MORALS

We know that the morale of the American troops in France is all right. The battle reports testify to that. But how about their morals? Are they succumbing to the supposedly insidious wiles of foreign lands, where the spirit of adventure tempts them and home restraints are lacking?

Reassuring testimony on this point has been given many times. Now we have additional corroboration from a commissioner sent abroad by the Anti-Saloon League. His mission was to find the extent to which drinking and vice prevail in the seaport cities where our fighting men land and in the camps where they finish their training. He pronounces the Yankee lads "far above the average in clean and sober living."

"The American military and naval forces in Europe," he says, "are a splendid body of men. Taken as a whole, they are so clean, so sober and so efficient that they bring a feeling of pride to every American who sees them."

Which is exactly what nearly all of us expected.
