EXCHANGING PRISONERS

England has just begun to exchange prisoners with Germany. The first Germans returned to their Fatherland are reported to be sadly disappointed.
They complain that the food is far worse in quality and much less in quantity than what they were given in the British prison camps, and that they are forced to perform intolerably hard war tasks.

The British on the contrary rejoice to return home and with good reason.
Many of them are physical wrecks.
Nearly all are incapacitated for ordinary work by the hardships and cruelties to which they were subjected by their captors.

It is the same experience that the hardships and cruelties to which they were subjected by their captors.

It is the same experience that the French have had since they began trading prisoners a few weeks ago.
It serves to explain why the allies have so long refrained from the custom, almost without exception in previous wars, of exchanging prisoners with the enemy as soon as possible after their capture.

Neither the British nor French are surprised. They knew exactly what to expect. They realized that while they sent the captured Germans back home in good health and spirits, proofs of scrupulously fair and decent treatment during their captivity, the men returned by Germany would be for the most part an economic liability.

They knew, too, that they could not expect the German government to heed the international rule that exchanged prisoners shall not return to the army nor need they expect the individual Germans to keep their parole. There is no more honor in Germany. The men sent home will return, as a matter of course, to some form of military service. Some have already. The records may be falsified, but there is no question of the fact.

Knowing this, England and France have decided, nevertheless, to trade considerable numbers of prisoners, as a humanitarian measure. It will give Germany an undeserved advantage and make the war a little harder to win, but they put humanity before military utility. The United States will no doubt do likewise.

Back of the Firing Line

Modern war conditions demand that our armies must have behind them national solidarity, the coordination of all the vast activities and an industrial army many times greater than the Nation's fighting forces.

The Nation's capital is linked with all these varied activities by the toll and long distance lines of the Bell System. Thousands of miles of special wire systems have been turned over to the Government for its exclusive use. Switchboards in the Government departments at Washington have been enlarged and new ones installed. Right of way is given to Government business over all commercial lines, so that the Government chiefs may keep in constant touch with every phase of the Nation's great task and direct its progress intelligently and effectively.

In organizing the military activities of the country, the Government has had the effective cooperation of the Bell Telephone System, which even in peace times reached 70,000 communities and now extends to the headquarters of every Army Department and Naval District in the United States.

THE FACE IN THE DARK

STARRING MAE HARSH, HERE

No sooner does Mae Marsh delight her admirers with a totally different sort of heroine than along she comes with yet another. She is truly "the girl of a thousand faces." She delighted the world with her tender, wistful heroine in "The Cinderella Man"; she wrung tears as the little French girl of "Fields of Honor," and as the lonely waiting beacon-girl in "The Beloved Traitor," he art lifted the play to the level of screen classics. And in the powerful drama chosen by Goldwyn for her newest appearance she is given opportunity to strike a deeper, more poignant note than offered by any of her previous characterizations. She is Jane Ridgeway in Irwin S. Cobb's drama of the secret service, "The Face in the Dark," which comes to the Roche Theater starting today.
