NURSES Girls are being urged to enlist for the nursing service as men used to be urged to enlist in army, navy and marine corps.

The same arguments apply in both cases. The girls who think they would like to do nursing, or who think it is their duty, are no more sure of their fitness than the lads were.

The benefits of giving military training to boys taken from all kinds of communities are already proving incalculable in their leavening influence upon those communities.

The demand for women with nursing training is going to increase rapidly for a number of years. It will not cease immediately upon the close of the war.
