

Packers' Costs and Profits

How much do you think it costs—

1. To dress beef, cure hides, and prepare all the numerous by-products?
2. To cool the meat for two or three days before shipment?
3. To freight it to all parts of the country in special refrigerator cars, iced daily?
4. To carry it in hundreds of branch houses, each with its refrigerating plant?
5. And to deliver it to the retailer—sweet and fresh—in less than two weeks after dressing?

Swift & Company did all this for you in 1917 at an expense of less than 2½ cents per pound of beef sold, including an average profit of ¼ of a cent a pound.

Figure for yourself how little effect this cost and profit had on prices you paid for beef steak.

TRAINING AVIATORS IS GREAT SPORT

Eddie Rickenbacker Tells How One New Man Got Cold Feet

WITH THE AMERICAN AIRMEN, France, July 10.—By Mail.—"Showing the new flyers around before they become gimpers is one great outdoor sport among the gimpers of the hat-in-the-ring squadron," according to Eddie Rickenbacker, all-American trained ace and former speed king in the automobile racing world.

"You never forget that first trip over the lines and it takes a good man to stick by an experienced gimper," he continued. "Usually we just take the boys over and go up and down the lines a few times. Of course the German archies shoot all the time and the first time they come near, you feel like zooming it off for home."

"It is not an uncommon thing for the Germans to waste five hundred shots on one of us during a trip up and down the sector we cover. So far they have never seriously injured or bothered any of the gimpers. But when the first one you've ever heard explodes with a grunt near you, it's scary, though it may be a considerable distance off."

"You think it's gone through your engine or some vital spot. I remember one chap we took out who has since become used to them. We were spotted by the Germans until we were over a nest of archies. Then they let us have it, dozens of them on all sides. I kept leading the new man on, until one exploded between us."

"He dived straight down and then went homeward. When last seen he was going south full speed, forgetting all about our formation. The rest of us went home after finishing the patrol, but he had not come back. We began to get worried. "Forty-eight hours and no word from him. Then a telephone call came in from a city about 20 miles off, saying he was safe and wanted a truck to come over after his plane, which was damaged in landing. We asked why he hadn't called up before and he replied: 'Well, it took me some time to get over shellshock.' We had a good laugh, for he was a comical chap and the life of the squadron."

"Another time another Gimper and

I took up a new man, a little chap who had just come out from school. He did pretty well, despite the archies, and we were coming home when he suddenly piqued on a plane with our own coquards on the wings.

"It was another of the gimpers. Ordinarily, if one gimper wants to pique on another for fun, it's all right, but for a new man to do it, it's bad form. So the gimper who was being piqued said to himself, as he reported later, 'You youngster, I'll teach you to pique on a gimper.'

"He turned on the new chap, who was piquing, but who had not fired, and gave him a volley of shots a little to one side of the wings. A good shot can do that without risk of hitting the machine coming at him. It was a surprise to the new man, who dived straight groundward, flattened out and headed due south. We wondered where he would stop, and heard nothing of him for a day and then a telephone call told us he had landed when his gas gave out just this side of Switzerland. His version of the story was that three boches had attacked him and driven him to where he landed. His scar is one of the squadron stories.

"Another of our real gimpers, when he first started, got into a duel with a plane behind our lines. For half an hour they maneuvered for position and finally our gimper got it, between his victim and the sun. He was diving and just ready to shoot when he noticed the American coquards on the machine he piqued at. As he put it, his mouth was watering to let the boche have it when he saw it was an American. He pulled off and the two planes came down.

"Once on the ground in an aviation field the two fighters looked each other over. Imagine their surprise on each finding that the other was an old chum from the south, where they had been schoolboys together. Neither knew the other was in France, since they came from different camps, and only providence, that looks after aviators, prevented their shooting each other."
