MISFITS By F. P. N.

Bumping around the country I have had bumped out of me all sentiment of sectional jealousy and have learned to estimate the value of localities with impartiality, or think I have.

Here's Corvallis, Albany's old rival, a fine place with one of the best agricultural colleges in the world.

Or course a good many people have gone to the shipyards for high wages, the same as from other valley towns; but this offers no excuse for people to call a town dead, as many do all the valley towns.

A popular Corvallis man who once captured an Albany girl is Mayor Lowe, also a live wire.

Mrs. J. C. Hammell and daughter Blanche are in charge of the Hotel Corvallis, a neat place. Miss Blanche is also kept busy with a large class of music students.

Another Corvallis man who captured an Albany girl is Byron Taylor. The said A. G. having spent most of her life as a nextdoor neighbor to Misfits, continues to keep on the good side of him by feeding him with well-cooked trout caught by herself.

Sam Hartsock, once of Albany, a college football celebrity, now famous as a kodak fiend, all the way from the turbid waters of Long Tom to the limpid Little Willamette, continues to dispense drugs, along with kodaks, for Graham & Wells. One of the oldest former Albany men is Bob Houston, a prosperous hardware dealer. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Huston, now reside with him.

Postmaster Vic Moses belongs to an old Linn county family. Just now he is highly elated over the fact that the postal receipts last month were double over a year ago.

Prof. Horner of the O. A. C., author of two European trips, once taught school in Albany. Dr. J. R. N. Bell and Bob Johnson have been in Albany enough times to be mentioned.

Fred Webber, a Portland architect, is here doing some work on the First National bank. He was born in Albany, a son of Albany's old-time Chief Engineer, Joe Weber.

I met Dennis Stovall, the author, today. He is a writer of boys' stories for Eastern magazines, and is unable to meet the demand. He has learned that writing stories is not an inspiration, but work.

Banker A. J. Johnson is another Linn county product. And there are others I expect to meet.

Returned to Canby— Corporal Clarence Wicks returned to Fort Canby this morning after a visit here with his folks.

Weather Report— The temperature, ranged from 52 to 75 degrees yesterday. The river stands at 9 foot.
