THE VOTER'S DUTY

Under the caption "No Divided Counsels at Washington," the independent discussers at length the question confronting the voters in the approaching Fall election. Arguing that it is the duty of Americans, regardless of previous political affiliation, to stand by the President and send to Congress men who will support him and his war policies, the Independent says:

"The Republican party will not find it easy to convince the people that it would have done better had it been in power or that it would do better if it could be placed in power now. Yet more difficult would be the task of convincing a sober judgment that anything would be gained by handing over to the Republican party that partial power which it is possible to transfer at the elections this fall, and which at the utmost would consist in republican supremacy in congress backed by republican administrations in states electing governors and legislatures.

"American experience of divided political responsibility has never been happy. A democratic President contending with a republican congress, or a republican President contending with a democratic congress, has never been, even in times of peace, an effective disposition of political forces. Waste and inefficiency have usually resulted from it, and it is not possible to imagine that a great war in its critical stages could be more effectively waged if energies and responsibilities should be so distributed.

"We yield to no one in profound respect for the wisdom and the patriotism of men like Colonel Roosevelt, Mr. Taft and Mr. Root. But when they say that the voters of America ought this fall to return a republican congress, and argue that the time has come to impose upon Mr. Wilson's administration the fearless inquisition and the practical legislative check of an opposition political majority, we are unconvinced. Irresponsible power is indeed a serious matter and no human being is infallible. But a congressional minority is quite competent to ask questions, to bring mistakes into the light of publicity and to register protests. It is not necessary for the preservation of our liberties to create the certainty that a republican congress would itself make lamentable and possibly wellnigh fatal errors in its desire to play a decisive part in the conduct of the war at a time and under circumstances when it could not be, as the democratic party is now, wholly responsible for success or failure. In our judgment hard headedness demands that this responsibility should not be destroyed. It is, we think, the plain dictate of common sense that the people should return a democratic majority to congress and assure to President Wilson the support of a democratic law-making power.

"As for questions of domestic policy, they are important but not now imperative. This is not the time to open up the whole future policy of the United States on the ownership and operation of railroads, telegraphs, telephones and express service, on the tariff after the war, on labor legislation and on immigration. The war must be won first. This one thing we do, is the motto of common sense until the Hun is defeated."
