

Daily Democrat

WM. H. HORNIBROOK, publisher
Entered at the postoffice at Albany, Oregon, as second class matter.

Daily published every evening except Sunday. Semi-weekly published Tuesdays and Fridays.

Business Matter

In ordering changes of address, subscribers should always give old as well as new address.

Subscription Rates—Daily
Delivered by carrier, per week . . . 10c
Delivered by carrier, per year . . . $4.00
By mail, at end of year . . . 3.50
By mail, in advance, per year . . . 3.00

Classified Rates

One cent per word for first publication; one-half cent per word thereafter, payable in advance. Minimum charge, twenty-five cents.

ESTABLISHED IN 1865

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1918

MAKE IT UNANIMOUS

The name of David P. Mason will appear upon the election ballot as a candidate for the office of state treasurer and his candidacy requires no apologies or explanations. He is making the race on his own merits and if elected may be depended upon to give the state honest and efficient service.

Linn county should have more than an ordinary interest in the candidacy of Mr. Mason for the reason that he has been identified with every progressive movement which has been launched in Albany during the past quarter of a century. In business, political and fraternal circles he has been a leader and moulder of public thought. Moreover, he has made a complete success of his private business and could therefore reasonably be expected to handle the business of the State of Oregon with the same caution that he has used in conducting his own.

If personal friendship does not commend his candidacy to the voters of Linn county, common loyalty to a Linn county candidate should. The vote for Mr. Mason in his home county should be made unanimous.

A ROYAL ENTRANCE

The heart of the civilized world went out to the king and queen of Belgium when, on Oct. 18, just three months after the beginning of the allied offensive, they entered Ostend and Bruges.

That unobtrusive entrance was as significant as any ceremonial pageant in recorded history. It was royal in its simplicity, as befits democratic rulers. It meant more than the restoration of Belgium. It signified concretely the defeat of the Hun and all his works.

It was the forerunner of many restorations. It meant that every land polluted by the touch of an ironshod German foot is going to be redeemed likewise, before the crusaders of civilization finish their task. Everywhere races which, like the Belgians, have proved their right to freedom, are going to be free.

HUN K-FORMS

The Huns seem to have stopped burning other people's towns. In occupying several large French and Belgian cities recently evacuated, the allies have been surprised to find no signs of the systematic destruction formerly visited on every city, town, village and farmhouse from which the invaders were driven. There is still a good deal of shameful theft, but comparatively little vandalism.

We need not hastily conclude that the Hun has had a change of heart. It is something, though, to find so conspicuous a change of heart and hand. Apparently the rising indignation of mankind, voiced by President Wilson in his last note, and the growing fear that the allies would visit reprisals on German cities, have had their effect. Whatever the cause, we are duly thankful. And though the German devil deceives nobody when in his military sickness he plays the monk, nevertheless he will benefit from his apparent reform. Every city he refrains from burning is one more city he will not have to rebuild, with his own labor and money, under allied taskmasters after the war.

Sells Property—

Dan Roth has sold his five-acre chicken ranch in Sunrise to G. N. Ames, the consideration being $2700. The deal was made thru W. A. Sharp.

HALLOWE'EN

We have Bogie Books on suggestions for Halloween Parties and Decorations of all kinds; Crepe Paper, Garlands, Favors, Tablecloths, Napkins, Doilies, Plates, Hats and Caps, Bon Bon Boxes, Festoons, Aprons, Lamp Shades, Lanterns, Cut Outs, Seals, Place Cards, Invitation Cards and Score Cards. These will all be sold at less than cost—get your selection early—see window display.

C. G. RAWLINGS
17030* 121 Broadalbin St.

A LITTLE SLIP-UP. MR. HUN LONDON, Oct. 24.—He was a brass hat and he came leaning heavily on a stick, limping into a casualty clearing station. He said he had sprained his ankle, but as he knew all about first aid he would bandage it himself.

The busy officer handed him the necessary trimmings, and quickly writing a tag, tied it to a button high up on the tunic.

Seated in an ambulance, he was English, his lack of knowledge of the soon in Amiens, where he remarked to the officer receiving wounded that he would stay in that city and be all right in a week or ten days. However, as his tag read "No. . . . General Hospital" at a base near the coast, the officer said, "Sorry, but I've got to send you down to the base"—and to the base the brass hat went.

There, despite his almost flawless

weariness of Austria-Hungary is strikingly illustrated by an inflammatory speech just delivered by Deputy George Strilbray, a Czech. In the face of his open defiance, the German members of the body sat silent and did not venture to shut him up. Earlier in the war there would have been violent excitement and opposition.

Strilbray took bitter exception to the constant application of the terms "traitor" and "coward" to the Czech soldiers.

"You call us traitors and cowards," the deputy said. "If there be one real man among you, let him try to realize the feelings of the Czech soldier who was driven by force into that war which the German chancellors called openly the 'fight of Germanism against Slavdom.' Try to realize how a soldier felt who was ordered under penalty of hanging to march to war against the interests of the Slav race, against the interests of his own brothers, against the interests of his own country. Was this man a coward, when he passed to the other side under the fire of Austrian and German cannon, which attacked him from the rear? Was that a coward who succeeded in going over and could then safely wait for the end of war, but who voluntarily went to the front again to risk his life?"

most ordinary army matters brought him under suspicion. The brass hat was a Hun. His curiosity and sprained ankle both were cured.

CZECH REPUTY UPBRAIDS AUSTRIA'S PARLIAMENT

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—The war-weariness of Austria-Hungary is strikingly illustrated by an inflammatory speech just delivered by Deputy George Strilbray, a Czech. In the face of his open defiance, the German members of the body sat silent and did not venture to shut him up. Earlier in the war there would have been violent excitement and opposition.

Strilbray took bitter exception to the constant application of the terms "traitor" and "coward" to the Czech soldiers.

"You call us traitors and cowards," the deputy said. "If there be one real man among you, let him try to realize the feelings of the Czech soldier who was driven by force into that war which the German chancellors called openly the 'fight of Germanism against Slavdom.' Try to realize how a soldier felt who was ordered under penalty of hanging to march to war against the interests of the Slav race, against the interests of his own brothers, against the interests of his own country. Was this man a coward, when he passed to the other side under the fire of Austrian and German cannon, which attacked him from the rear? Was that a coward who succeeded in going over and could then safely wait for the end of war, but who voluntarily went to the front again to risk his life?"

There, despite his almost flawless

weariness of Austria-Hungary is strikingly illustrated by an inflammatory speech just delivered by Deputy George Strilbray, a Czech. In the face of his open defiance, the German members of the body sat silent and did not venture to shut him up. Earlier in the war there would have been violent excitement and opposition.

Strilbray took bitter exception to the constant application of the terms "traitor" and "coward" to the Czech soldiers.

"You call us traitors and cowards," the deputy said. "If there be one real man among you, let him try to realize the feelings of the Czech soldier who was driven by force into that war which the German chancellors called openly the 'fight of Germanism against Slavdom.' Try to realize how a soldier felt who was ordered under penalty of hanging to march to war against the interests of the Slav race, against the interests of his own brothers, against the interests of his own country. Was this man a coward, when he passed to the other side under the fire of Austrian and German cannon, which attacked him from the rear? Was that a coward who succeeded in going over and could then safely wait for the end of war, but who voluntarily went to the front again to risk his life?"

There, despite his almost flawless

weariness of Austria-Hungary is strikingly illustrated by an inflammatory speech just delivered by Deputy George Strilbray, a Czech. In the face of his open defiance, the German members of the body sat silent and did not venture to shut him up. Earlier in the war there would have been violent excitement and opposition.

Strilbray took bitter exception to the constant application of the terms "traitor" and "coward" to the Czech soldiers.

"You call us traitors and cowards," the deputy said. "If there be one real man among you, let him try to realize the feelings of the Czech soldier who was driven by force into that war which the German chancellors called openly the 'fight of Germanism against Slavdom.' Try to realize how a soldier felt who was ordered under penalty of hanging to march to war against the interests of the Slav race, against the interests of his own brothers, against the interests of his own country. Was this man a coward, when he passed to the other side under the fire of Austrian and German cannon, which attacked him from the rear? Was that a coward who succeeded in going over and could then safely wait for the end of war, but who voluntarily went to the front again to risk his life?"

There, despite his almost flawless

weariness of Austria-Hungary is strikingly illustrated by an inflammatory speech just delivered by Deputy George Strilbray, a Czech. In the face of his open defiance, the German members of the body sat silent and did not venture to shut him up. Earlier in the war there would have been violent excitement and opposition.

Strilbray took bitter exception to the constant application of the terms "traitor" and "coward" to the Czech soldiers.

"You call us traitors and cowards," the deputy said. "If there be one real man among you, let him try to realize the feelings of the Czech soldier who was driven by force into that war which the German chancellors called openly the 'fight of Germanism against Slavdom.' Try to realize how a soldier felt who was ordered under penalty of hanging to march to war against the interests of the Slav race, against the interests of his own brothers, against the interests of his own country. Was this man a coward, when he passed to the other side under the fire of Austrian and German cannon, which attacked him from the rear? Was that a coward who succeeded in going over and could then safely wait for the end of war, but who voluntarily went to the front again to risk his life?"

There, despite his almost flawless

weariness of Austria-Hungary is strikingly illustrated by an inflammatory speech just delivered by Deputy George Strilbray, a Czech. In the face of his open defiance, the German members of the body sat silent and did not venture to shut him up. Earlier in the war there would have been violent excitement and opposition.

Strilbray took bitter exception to the constant application of the terms "traitor" and "coward" to the Czech soldiers.

"You call us traitors and cowards," the deputy said. "If there be one real man among you, let him try to realize the feelings of the Czech soldier who was driven by force into that war which the German chancellors called openly the 'fight of Germanism against Slavdom.' Try to realize how a soldier felt who was ordered under penalty of hanging to march to war against the interests of the Slav race, against the interests of his own brothers, against the interests of his own country. Was this man a coward, when he passed to the other side under the fire of Austrian and German cannon, which attacked him from the rear? Was that a coward who succeeded in going over and could then safely wait for the end of war, but who voluntarily went to the front again to risk his life?"

There, despite his almost flawless

weariness of Austria-Hungary is strikingly illustrated by an inflammatory speech just delivered by Deputy George Strilbray, a Czech. In the face of his open defiance, the German members of the body sat silent and did not venture to shut him up. Earlier in the war there would have been violent excitement and opposition.

Strilbray took bitter exception to the constant application of the terms "traitor" and "coward" to the Czech soldiers.

"You call us traitors and cowards," the deputy said. "If there be one real man among you, let him try to realize the feelings of the Czech soldier who was driven by force into that war which the German chancellors called openly the 'fight of Germanism against Slavdom.' Try to realize how a soldier felt who was ordered under penalty of hanging to march to war against the interests of the Slav race, against the interests of his own brothers, against the interests of his own country. Was this man a coward, when he passed to the other side under the fire of Austrian and German cannon, which attacked him from the rear? Was that a coward who succeeded in going over and could then safely wait for the end of war, but who voluntarily went to the front again to risk his life?"

There, despite his almost flawless

weariness of Austria-Hungary is strikingly illustrated by an inflammatory speech just delivered by Deputy George Strilbray, a Czech. In the face of his open defiance, the German members of the body sat silent and did not venture to shut him up. Earlier in the war there would have been violent excitement and opposition.

Strilbray took bitter exception to the constant application of the terms "traitor" and "coward" to the Czech soldiers.

"You call us traitors and cowards," the deputy said. "If there be one real man among you, let him try to realize the feelings of the Czech soldier who was driven by force into that war which the German chancellors called openly the 'fight of Germanism against Slavdom.' Try to realize how a soldier felt who was ordered under penalty of hanging to march to war against the interests of the Slav race, against the interests of his own brothers, against the interests of his own country. Was this man a coward, when he passed to the other side under the fire of Austrian and German cannon, which attacked him from the rear? Was that a coward who succeeded in going over and could then safely wait for the end of war, but who voluntarily went to the front again to risk his life?"

There, despite his almost flawless

weariness of Austria-Hungary is strikingly illustrated by an inflammatory speech just delivered by Deputy George Strilbray, a Czech. In the face of his open defiance, the German members of the body sat silent and did not venture to shut him up. Earlier in the war there would have been violent excitement and opposition.

Strilbray took bitter exception to the constant application of the terms "traitor" and "coward" to the Czech soldiers.

"You call us traitors and cowards," the deputy said. "If there be one real man among you, let him try to realize the feelings of the Czech soldier who was driven by force into that war which the German chancellors called openly the 'fight of Germanism against Slavdom.' Try to realize how a soldier felt who was ordered under penalty of hanging to march to war against the interests of the Slav race, against the interests of his own brothers, against the interests of his own country. Was this man a coward, when he passed to the other side under the fire of Austrian and German cannon, which attacked him from the rear? Was that a coward who succeeded in going over and could then safely wait for the end of war, but who voluntarily went to the front again to risk his life?"

There, despite his almost flawless

weariness of Austria-Hungary is strikingly illustrated by an inflammatory speech just delivered by Deputy George Strilbray, a Czech. In the face of his open defiance, the German members of the body sat silent and did not venture to shut him up. Earlier in the war there would have been violent excitement and opposition.

Strilbray took bitter exception to the constant application of the terms "traitor" and "coward" to the Czech soldiers.

"You call us traitors and cowards," the deputy said. "If there be one real man among you, let him try to realize the feelings of the Czech soldier who was driven by force into that war which the German chancellors called openly the 'fight of Germanism against Slavdom.' Try to realize how a soldier felt who was ordered under penalty of hanging to march to war against the interests of the Slav race, against the interests of his own brothers, against the interests of his own country. Was this man a coward, when he passed to the other side under the fire of Austrian and German cannon, which attacked him from the rear? Was that a coward who succeeded in going over and could then safely wait for the end of war, but who voluntarily went to the front again to risk his life?"

There, despite his almost flawless

weariness of Austria-Hungary is strikingly illustrated by an inflammatory speech just delivered by Deputy George Strilbray, a Czech. In the face of his open defiance, the German members of the body sat silent and did not venture to shut him up. Earlier in the war there would have been violent excitement and opposition.

Strilbray took bitter exception to the constant application of the terms "traitor" and "coward" to the Czech soldiers.

"You call us traitors and cowards," the deputy said. "If there be one real man among you, let him try to realize the feelings of the Czech soldier who was driven by force into that war which the German chancellors called openly the 'fight of Germanism against Slavdom.' Try to realize how a soldier felt who was ordered under penalty of hanging to march to war against the interests of the Slav race, against the interests of his own brothers, against the interests of his own country. Was this man a coward, when he passed to the other side under the fire of Austrian and German cannon, which attacked him from the rear? Was that a coward who succeeded in going over and could then safely wait for the end of war, but who voluntarily went to the front again to risk his life?"

There, despite his almost flawless

weariness of Austria-Hungary is strikingly illustrated by an inflammatory speech just delivered by Deputy George Strilbray, a Czech. In the face of his open defiance, the German members of the body sat silent and did not venture to shut him up. Earlier in the war there would have been violent excitement and opposition.

Strilbray took bitter exception to the constant application of the terms "traitor" and "coward" to the Czech soldiers.

"You call us traitors and cowards," the deputy said. "If there be one real man among you, let him try to realize the feelings of the Czech soldier who was driven by force into that war which the German chancellors called openly the 'fight of Germanism against Slavdom.' Try to realize how a soldier felt who was ordered under penalty of hanging to march to war against the interests of the Slav race, against the interests of his own brothers, against the interests of his own country. Was this man a coward, when he passed to the other side under the fire of Austrian and German cannon, which attacked him from the rear? Was that a coward who succeeded in going over and could then safely wait for the end of war, but who voluntarily went to the front again to risk his life?"

There, despite his almost flawless

weariness of Austria-Hungary is strikingly illustrated by an inflammatory speech just delivered by Deputy George Strilbray, a Czech. In the face of his open defiance, the German members of the body sat silent and did not venture to shut him up. Earlier in the war there would have been violent excitement and opposition.

Strilbray took bitter exception to the constant application of the terms "traitor" and "coward" to the Czech soldiers.

"You call us traitors and cowards," the deputy said. "If there be one real man among you, let him try to realize the feelings of the Czech soldier who was driven by force into that war which the German chancellors called openly the 'fight of Germanism against Slavdom.' Try to realize how a soldier felt who was ordered under penalty of hanging to march to war against the interests of the Slav race, against the interests of his own brothers, against the interests of his own country. Was this man a coward, when he passed to the other side under the fire of Austrian and German cannon, which attacked him from the rear? Was that a coward who succeeded in going over and could then safely wait for the end of war, but who voluntarily went to the front again to risk his life?"

There, despite his almost flawless

weariness of Austria-Hungary is strikingly illustrated by an inflammatory speech just delivered by Deputy George Strilbray, a Czech. In the face of his open defiance, the German members of the body sat silent and did not venture to shut him up. Earlier in the war there would have been violent excitement and opposition.

Strilbray took bitter exception to the constant application of the terms "traitor" and "coward" to the Czech soldiers.

"You call us traitors and cowards," the deputy said. "If there be one real man among you, let him try to realize the feelings of the Czech soldier who was driven by force into that war which the German chancellors called openly the 'fight of Germanism against Slavdom.' Try to realize how a soldier felt who was ordered under penalty of hanging to march to war against the interests of the Slav race, against the interests of his own brothers, against the interests of his own country. Was this man a coward, when he passed to the other side under the fire of Austrian and German cannon, which attacked him from the rear? Was that a coward who succeeded in going over and could then safely wait for the end of war, but who voluntarily went to the front again to risk his life?"

There, despite his almost flawless

weariness of Austria-Hungary is strikingly illustrated by an inflammatory speech just delivered by Deputy George Strilbray, a Czech. In the face of his open defiance, the German members of the body sat silent and did not venture to shut him up. Earlier in the war there would have been violent excitement and opposition.

We Never Use Bait

TO GET CUSTOMERS INTO OUR STORE

Just Good, Clean Merchandise at a Fair Profit—no time spent in printing the figure "9", so popular nowadays with department stores. They say billions of this figure is used every day as real bait for customers.

OUR DRUGS AND CHEMICALS are the BEST that Money Can Buy—We sell them to you at fair prices, with good service.

Burkhart & Lee

Repair Work

Tractors and Autos a specialty
Call on

AUTO & MACHINE WORKS

Old Watson Bldg, First Street
Ben F. Ridders, Prop.

FISHER-BRADEN

Undertakers

Auto Service Lady Assistant

Cash Paid for Junk

Bring in all kinds of metal, iron, scraps, sacks, rags, etc. Help the Government conserve its metal.

FOR SALE—Several thousand grain and potato sacks. Also 5-passenger Ford.

PACIFIC JUNK COMPANY

E. Rogoway

Second and Baker Streets, Bell

345-R, Home 2227

Realty

Canadian Lands

LOANS AND INSURANCE

Geo. Taylor

Corner of Second and Broadalbin

Bell 521; Home 2075

THE BEST

BAKED GOODS

GROCERIES, PRODUCE

and FRUITS

at

PARKER'S

"The Sign of Quality"

136 Lyon St. Both Phones

Frank G. Will

JEWELER

High class Jewelry, Silver, Cut

Glass and Hand Painted China

STETTER'S

Full line of Chinaware, Dishes,

Crockery, Glassware, Granite,

Tinware, and Groceries.

ST NATIONAL BANK

MEMBER FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM
Every banking accommodation is afforded by the ample resources, conservative management and courteous treatment of the officers and employees of this institution.

Try a checking account with us.

THRIFT—The need of the American People.

ST SAVINGS BANK

CLASSIFIED ADS.-BUSINESS DIRECTORY

CLASSIFIED

For Sale

FOR SALE—11 good, thrifty shoats.
Call Home phone 3526. 23024

FOR SALE—Dodge car in good condition. Can be seen at the Palace Feed Stable. 23029

FOR SALE—A Dodge car, latest model. Good as new. Has bumper, cut out and brand new tire and tire cover extra. Call Bell phone 1383 or Home 1380. Between 9 a. m. and 5 p. m. 23025

FOR SALE—Used car bargains. One 1913 Ford newly painted, $350; one 1917 Ford $500. One 1918 Ford $575. C. H. Murphy, at Irvin's Garage. 091f

FOR SALE—1 10-20 new International Titan Gas Tractor at a bargain. Also 1 Bull Tractor with 2 14-inch Tractor Plows used but short time. Murphy & Harold at Irvin's Garage. 091f

TO SELL OR TRADE—Timberlands worth $8,000. Will take real property in exchange. Box 43, Brownsville. 0191f

For Rent

FOR RENT—20-acre farm, all in cultivation. 3 miles south on Pacific Highway. Hecker & Beam, 133 Lyon street. 23029

FOR RENT—7-room house and 6 acres, 1 mile from courthouse, Albany, Ore. Fish & Hodges.

FOR RENT—6-12 acres of land in Sunrise by the shore. Call Bell phone 515Y or Home phone 5382. 23025*

PASTURE FOR RENT—For 4 spring calves. Good shelter, plenty of straw and separate from other stock. Price $1 per month. James McCourt, 300 North Oak St. or Bell phone 424R.

Miscellaneous

CHURCH—I will make cider for the last time this season on the 29th of October. Call C. E. Widmer, Home phone 2538. 23024*

CARRIER BOYS WANTED—Boys wanted to carry Evening Telegrams. See Albert Senders. 23024

PIANO LESSONS—Progressive Series. Mrs. Winifred Worrell, Bell phone 473R. 636 W. 3d St. 0111f

FOUND—Pair of glasses in case. Can be had by identifying and paying for this ad. Call at Democrat Office.

WANTED—An "Oricle" baby basket at the Red Cross Store.

WANTED—200 acres of land to plow with caterpillar tractor. Address A. W. Remm, Box 95, Albany, Oregon. 0171f

WANTED—Man with team or tractor to plow 10 acres of land. Bell phone 510L. W. E. Hunt, Sunrise. 10025

WANTED—Woman for light housework. Call Bell phone 304R. 23025

LOST—A marmoset on the Lebanon Road between Albany and Fry Station. Return to Anna Wickizer at Waldo Anderson & Sons. Liberal reward. 23025

WANTED—To hear from owner of good ranch for sale. State cash price, full description. D. F. Bush, Minneapolis, Minn. 01926n923d728*

FOR SALE—1 8-18 Case gas tractor with 2 14-inch plows, power lift, John Deere mule, at a bargain. Murphy & Harold, Irvin's Garage, Albany, Oregon. 0191f

FARM TO TRADE—240 acre stock and grain ranch for small farm close to Albany. Apply Box 17, R. F. D. No. 5, Albany. 23025*

WANTED

Three teams to haul piling at once.

O. V. GAMBLE,

Jefferson, Oregon.

RECLEANED

CHEAT