SUPPORT THE PRESIDENT

"If in these critical days it is your wish to sustain me with undivided minds, I beg that you will say so in a way which it will not be possible to misunderstand, either here at home or among our associates on the other side of the sea."

In the above words President Wilson throws the gauntlet down to the republican national committee and forces the fight which has heretofore been conducted behind closed doors into the clear light of day.

"Politics is adjourned," said Woodrow Wilson several months ago. It was adjourned, but the congress of politics was reconvened by Will H. Hays, chairman of the republican national committee, within 24 hours after his election to that important office.

It may matter little to these men who think solely in terms of votes as to whether or not the President of the United States has the unstinted support of a friendly congress in this great national crisis, but it matters a great deal to the millions of Woodrow Wilson republicans whose sole thought is to see the Hun driven behind his own borders and a durable peace enforced upon a defeated enemy.

But what does the President's appeal mean to the voters of Oregon? If it means anything it means that the President desires the election of Oswald West as United States senator and the election of the democratic nominees for congress in the second and third districts.

A DANGEROUS ENEMY

vasion of northern Italy. It was not beaten, however. Soldiers and people rallied with a fine spirit that will always be to the glory of Italy, stopped the enemy and began an offensive strengthened and united.

An echo of the bitter lesson the Italians learned in their dark hour is found in the replies to a question asked of several thousand soldiers of Italy.

Through a magazine in the armies of Gen. Diaz the men were asked to name which of their four enemies they considered the most odious.

The pictures you are planning to send to that Soldier of yours—they must soon on the way if you would make sure that he has them to gladden his heart on Christmas Morning.
