On My Rounds

I ran into the electric light plant of Claud Ellison, formerly of Albany, at Falls City. Claud is the whole business. He has a good proposition and is attending to it faithfully.

Up in the woods, F. C. is an interesting place. A mill town.

Being county judge is one of the most difficult of positions to fill and not disgruntle someone. Judge E. C. Kirkpatrick, who once resided in Albany for awhile, stepped on the toes of some West Salem people and they snowed him under 140 to 17. He was beaten in the county by 100 votes.

At Rickreall I met S. B. Burch, brother of J. B. Burch of near Albany; also his father, an oldtimer. Rickreall used to be quite a flourmaking city, but the mill now is deserted except by spiders; and one store covers the field.

Close by is the farm of Congressman Pat McArthur.

Independence, long celebrated for its hops and booze, has very few of the hops any longer, and hardly any booze, except on armistice celebration days.

Occasionally I meet a man who reminds me of the fellow who was so lazy he just sat around and did nothing. Someone asked him how he managed things. "Oh," he said, "I sets and thinks, and then sometimes I just sets."

George Conkey is a prosperous merchant in Independence. He clerked in the store of S. E. Young in 1900 during the period when people were arguing about when the 20th century began. Among his fellow clerks were Fred W. Blumberg, Dr. W. E. Stewart and Mrs. Edna Breckenridge Stewart. He continues to think that Mr. Young was one of the finest men in the world.

Fred Erickson, who built the Albany P. O., is doing a fine job on a new building for the Farmers' State Bank, one of the prettiest in the city.

Am writing this in the lobby of the Hotel Monmouth, which is also a dress making parlor, with electric motor attachment. The presence of the school ma'am's waiting for the flying of the flu makes it a place worth while, and a comfortable one during the heavy rainstorm prevailing.

Monmouth, Nov. 14.
