THE SAME OLD BOYS

Unless some unforeseen renewal of hostilities arises or some failure of agreement over the peace terms which necessitates our maintaining a great army and navy, our armies should before long be pretty well demobilized, and our boys back, ready to resume their places in the civilian life of our country.

While this process of demobilization is always a serious one, and fraught with considerable danger in any country, we have less to fear than those nations where military matters have always been of great importance, and whose men have now for more than four years been given over to army life.

Our boys have made good soldiers; they took into that business just the same splendid energy and courage and enthusiasm which they put into their daily pursuits here, and America may well be proud of her army.

But while our men will come back perhaps a little graver, all of them more responsible and all of them better citizens because of their experience as soldiers; nevertheless the time taken out of their lives for war has been short, some of them having been gone only a few months, and to a very great extent they will come back the boys who went away. They have not been divorced from their peaceful pursuits long enough to lose interest in them or to suffer the restlessness which is too often the portion of the soldier returning after long experience in the field.

This fact will greatly simplify the problems involved in the return of our armies and their absorption into industry.

There is more danger of the country being disorganized than the boys who return to it. They are the same old boys, only better, who are coming back; they should find the same old country, only better, waiting for them.

Holland reports the discovery of a natural gas well. Must be a mistake. Very likely a Limberger cheese buried there by some refugee from over the border.

CONSERVATION

As the country starts upon its era of conservation which is for the purpose of releasing food supplies needed abroad without incurring unnecessary stringency at home, it might be well to consider again just what conservation means, and how it is best accomplished.

In the first place, conservation does not mean either going without or hoarding. True conservation consists simply in the elimination of waste in the use of any commodity.

There should be always in every household, regardless of emergency or international demands, a careful canvas of supplies on hand before anything is bought. Purchases should be made in accordance with a prepared program of consumption.

There must be an understanding on the part of the purchaser of food values and their proper combination, to insure the purchase only of proper kinds and amounts.

Food bought thus carefully, prepared carefully and without waste, means meals of the first grade at a minimum cost, which is to everybody's advantage.

The final step is the saving of every particle of usable food material after the meal, and its future use in combinations tastefully prepared.

There is no hardship in such a program. It is distinctly to the benefit of the household, and by the mere elimination of waste of food we shall set free quantities of food sufficient for the millions of hungry people abroad.

It may be true, as certain champions of intemperance insist, "that ice cream sodas are more deleterious to the system than highballs." Still, as some neutral philosopher remarks, "You never heard of a man standing till midnight with his foot on the brass rail of a sodawater fountain."

Corporal Glenn Gilbert Impressed with Washington

Washington, D. C., Nov. 29, 1918. Dear Mother: No doubt you will be surprised to see me head my letters in a different city every time, but I am taking in all of the East that I can, for I don't expect to be in the service much longer and may never see another chance to see it.

I wrote my last letter to you from Richmond, last Sunday. I got back to Camp Fustis about 9 o'clock Sunday night and stayed there Monday and Tuesday. Tuesday night at retreat, they announced that 28 men from our battery could have a five day furlough and go to Washington, D. C. or New York. I succeeded in procuring one and we fellows left at 1 a. m. Wednesday I ran autotruck for Newport News, Va., intending to take the boat Wednesday night from Newport to Old Point Comfort and then up the Potomac river to Washington. But we changed our minds and caught a 1 p. m. train out of Newport and arrived in Washington about midnight Wednesday. There was the most awful jam of soldiers, sailors and civilians that I ever expect to see in my life. I lost both of my pals in the scuffle and haven't seen them since.

Washington is a very large and interesting city, and one could spend a month here and not see half of it. I ate my Thanksgiving dinner in one of the hotels here and enjoyed it thoroughly altho the day was drizzly and cold. Today the weather is fine and summerlike.

This morning I took a sightseeing car, with a bunch of sailors and marines, and we were shown all of the principle parts of the city; we were not allowed to go into the White House as it is closed during wartime, but we saw it from the outside and the beautiful, spacious grounds adjoining it. We visited the pan-American Union building and our guide took us all thru its interior. It certainly is most wonderful and beautiful. We saw Washington's Monument, the Potomac river, Museums etc. and last of all we visited the United States Capitol and were shown all thru it by a special guide. We were in the senate chamber, house of representatives, supreme court room, and I can now say that I have been in the President's Chair, for I sat in it while the guide explained all about that particular room. It was the room in which the President signs or vetoes all bills at the adjournment of each congress.

Well, folks, I could write forever and not tell all I would want to on my trip to Washington, so I will let it wait until a later day. How is everything at home? I expect to be with you about Xmas, but let's don't let our hopes get too high. I was talking with a sailor the other day and he said that the Madawaska Coffee has gone up 10c per lb.
