Visiting Brother—

Miss Bertha Shedd of Shedd is here visiting her brother, Chas. Shedd.

The Unexpected.

An amusing instance of the unexpected happened at the front ended in a French and a German pilot landing together. The Frenchman and the German were circling and dipping for battle position. Suddenly, the French pilot, thinking he had the advantage, charged his enemy from the rear. But the German did not swerve sufficiently and the left wing of the French machine struck the right-hand struts of the German. The collision caused the French airplane to spin around violently until its tail whizzed between the wings of the German—and stuck. Apparently being too busy—or perhaps too astonished—to shoot at each other, the opponents spiraled side by side in a close embrace, ultimately crashing into the boughs of some trees. Neither pilot was hurt, so they clambered out, looking at each other—and the German was reminded that he was a prisoner.

Forestry After the War.

Nobody except those of us who have seen something of life at the front during the last four years can realize what an enormous quantity of timber has been taken from this country for war purposes and what an enormous amount of planting and tending of trees will be necessary to replace it. Unfortunately foresters who really understand all that afforestation means are not numerous in England, and though the necessity of educating youngsters for the work has received much more serious attention in the last few years than it ever did before, when our methods—as in many other things—were haphazard, the facilities are still hardly sufficient to give us enough foresters to cope with the demand.—Westminster Gazette.
