PUBLIC DIPLOMACY

There is nothing remarkable in the fact that the President's demand for full and free publicity in connection with the peace conference should be backed by the press representatives of the United States and Great Britain, while the press of France, Japan and other countries was disposed to acquiesce in a strictly limited news policy.

This difference of viewpoint did not necessarily indicate that either the government or the press of any country represented was in favor of "secret diplomacy" in the old, evil sense. What they want is presumably just about what the government, press and people of Britain and America want—an honest international arrangement, not qualified and undermined by secret treaties and understandings, but adopted in good faith, with the knowledge and approval of the public in every country concerned.

The difference revealed is mainly one of method. The Anglo-Saxon idea is to have everything openly discussed and understood, as the plans advance step by step, the public cooperating with the government in mutual expressions of opinion, until the final, completed program is ready for adoption. The French idea—we might almost say the idea of all the other nations—is to have less publicity from day to day, less inquiry into the actual processes by which the peace delegates arrive at their conclusions, but official statements from time to time of the conclusions reached, and eventual publication of the completed program.

Thus in either case the diplomacy would be technically "open," because the whole world would be informed as to the essentials of the treaty.

This difference of procedure, however, might naturally make a big difference in the conclusions arrived at. If the public is able to keep in touch with every important step taken by the conference from day to day, the public is far better able to check up the work of the conference, and to make sure that its own sovereign will is expressed. It is ground for congratulation, therefore, that the conference has yielded considerably to the British-American demand for greater freedom of report and comment.

The whole business seems primarily one of journalistic custom and tradition. British and American newspapers are used to "printing everything." Newspapers in nearly all other countries print infinitely less of what we consider "news," and are far more subject to the reticence imposed by political and social custom.

MILLINER SECURED

FOR WORTH'S STORE
 Worth's Department Store has secured the services of Miss Margaret Vallahan of St. Paul, Minn., who will have charge of their millinery department this coming season. She comes very highly recommended, having had 16 years' experience working in the biggest and best department stores in the East; also in the large stores of the coast cities. At present she is spending her time in the style rooms studying the styles and materials to be used this coming season, and is on the lookout for the newest creations in millinery and headwear. Early next month she has made arrangements to attend the different large millinery openings to be held in the best millinery centers.

Mr. Worth states that it is gratifying to know that he was fortunate in securing the services of a good up-to-date trimmer and that the ladies of Albany and vicinity may look forward to getting service and satisfaction this coming season.

Discharged from Service—

Sergeant Chester Edholm has received his discharge but will go back to work for the spruce division, as a stenographer, in Portland.

SEEM TO HAVE HIDING PLACE

Just Where Do Facts Go That One Knows, Temporarily Forgets and Afterward Remembers?

One of the odd things about what we call loss of memory is that it is catching. How often when one person forgets a name well known to him does his companion, to whom it is equally well known, forget it, too. Why is that?

The other day I had an excellent example of this odd epidemic. It was necessary for the name of a certain actress—not a star, but a versatile repository of much discussion—to be recalled in order that a letter to him might quickly be dispatched. I had forgotten his name, but I described him and his methods with sufficient accuracy for every one (there were about six of us) to recognize him. Some of us could even say in what parts we had seen him and compare notes as to his experience, and yet his name absolutely eluded me and all. Why? We all knew it; why did we unanimously fail to know it?

We parted intent upon obtaining this necessary information. On meeting again the next day each of us had it just enough, and it had broken upon each, more or less suddenly, during the night.

The great mystery to me is, where are the things one forgets, but suddenly will remember again, while one is forgetting them? Where are they lurking? This problem of their whereabouts, their capacity to hide and elude, distresses me far more than my inability to call them from the vasty deep of the brain. Or are they, perhaps, not there at all? Do they not, perhaps, have evenings out, times off for lunch and so forth, and thus we sometimes miss them? Or can there perhaps be some vast extramural territory of the memory from which facts have to be obtained—as, if one would consult reference books, one must wait until the volumes can be secured? The fact that they always, or nearly always, return, sooner or later, rather supports these theories.—Exchange.
