Big Estate in Britain.
"Country Life" (London, England) advertises in a recent issue an auction sale of part of a British landed estate whose size might cause even our biggest ranch-owners to lift their eyebrows. This consists of "the northern portion of the Sutherland estates," extending to an area of 200,143 acres! This vast tract of hundreds of square miles, however, is only a small part of the holdings of the duke of Sutherland, which amount to "about 1,358,000 acres." The tract to be sold. It is announced, "affords the opportunity to acquire the whole length of the famous salmon rivers, the Navar and Halladale."

Got Away With It.
"You mustn't smoke a cigar on the front platform," said the motorman. "This isn't a cigar," replied the smoker. "No?" "This is a cigarette, which—" Here he took a couple of hasty puffs. "Which may be smoked while you are arguing about it."

A Scant Solace.
"I don't believe they will ever make Europe bone dry." "I don't either," rejoined Uncle Bill Bottletop. "But Europe is a long way to travel just for a drink."

Squashing Him.
Robert Chambers tells a good one in which Rex Beach is the hero. Seems that a certain acquaintance of Beach occasionally breaks into print and causes the novelist great annoyance by bragging about it. "One day," says Chambers, "Beach and this party met and the latter said, 'Did you see my latest story in the Wonder Magazine?' "Yes," said Beach, "and a friend of mine said it a nice little compliment." "How's that?" asked the delighted poet.

"He wanted to know if I wrote it," retorted Beach.

German Deterioration.
German doctors estimate that the average person in cities of that country lost about one-sixth of his weight during the war. Men lost slightly more weight than women. Farmers lost no weight at all.

Good Advice.
Salem must have industries like the paper mill that is seeking to locate here in order to become a real city. That is why the city councilmen, instead of trying to shut it out, should do everything in their power to induce it to come, says the Capital Journal.
