JUST READ THIS

Some time ago The Democrat commented upon the unfavorable reputation that Albany was apt to receive as a result of freakish laws, petitions, etc., if the thing persisted. First it was dogs and then bees, and others may have different ideas stored within their craniums for further use in making Albany look like a joke to the outside world.

The Democrat was right in its predictions, for Col. Hofer, in his Manufacturer, a trade journal published at Salem, took the matter up and the New York Times reprints the Manufacturer's story about dogs. Read this and decide if you want this kind of advertising to continue:

"Oregon newspapers have boasted that in the City of Albany they have the very ultimate in 'slow' towns. The Manufacturer, published at Salem, says of it:

"The town was actually too quiet for a Presbyterian college to live and churches have been forced to consolidate or go out of business. Children are still produced by the poorer classes, but its streetcar line was pulled up some years ago. It has been strong for Chautauquas and Three-fingered-Jack revivals, but even they have been running behind for lack of interest. In old days saloons helped a little and the town had a brewery and farmers and loggers came in from the country and once in a while the City Marshal had something to do and someone got into jail. But the jail is permanently closed and the Elks' Club is the only wicked place in town."

However, there is a limit to all things, and when Albany took a referendum on the question of prohibiting dogs on the street, the citizens had a noisy campaign over the issue and voted it down. The dogs have now taken hold of life with renewed zest and are disporting themselves with new zeal. The citizens are still talking over the election, and it looks like the dog issue has put the place back on the map. There is talk of holding an election to vote bonds for a new engine house, and a Citizens' Committee is at work on the project of repairing the sidewalks. Albany hit the bottom, and is on the upgrade, probably due to the stimulation of municipal life by the dog issue.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Albany has more serious work to do than entertaining the outside world with such rot. At the head of the Chamber of Commerce is a man with broad business experience, sound foresight, energy and a determination to do things for the betterment of the city. Frank J. Miller thoroughly believes in the future of Linn county and is working for a bigger and better Albany. If the promoters of freak legislation will devote their energies to helping Mr. Miller, Albany will indeed be all that he hopes to make it.

Linn county is off with a big leap today on the last lap of paying for her share of the war debts. Not paying for them, but loaning Uncle Sam a little gob of the necessary money at a good rate of interest and under most favorable conditions. The thought of the fact that 50,000 Americans died in France, and that 200,000 more would have died before this time had not the armistice been signed, is going to have a mighty big influence with many people who put patriotism before dollars.

Warfare Little Changed.

When General Pershing saw the dangerous salient in the German line, he put in the American army instantly, meeting the emergency as Caesar met the rush of the Nervii in that same northeast France. When he encountered the complicated fortifications, trenches, pits and tangles of the Argonne, he employed precisely the kind of tactics to win through that Napoleon employed at the River Centres more than 2,300 years ago and the same that Caesar used in his triumphant campaign against Vercingetorix. The details change, the principles remain. Napoleon summed up the art of war in 78 maxims, and the last of these declares that the only way to become a great captain is to study the campaigns of the great generals of all times.
