BUY BONDS TO BOOM BUSINESS

There are still some citizens who say, "It isn't necessary for everybody to subscribe to this war loan as it was before. The banks can take it."

The banks can take it, if they have to. But anyone who takes this view of the Victory Loan should seriously ask himself whether he wants the banks to do it.

Not to mention the responsibility resting on every citizen to play the part of a self-respecting patriot, there are financial facts that cannot be ignored. The government has already spent the money it expects from this loan. It must have $4,500,000,000, either from the people or from the banks.

Private enterprise, like public enterprise, needs billions. If the banks have to advance billions to the government because the public refuses, the banks will not have the billions to lend for business reconstruction and the resumption of industrial activity.

So buying bonds is very much like eating your cake and still having it. An enthusiastic and widespread purchase of these last war bonds by the public will at the same time enable the government to pay its bills and enable the banks to use their accumulated funds for the stimulation of every line of industry and trade.
