LAW OR ANARCHY

Over 1,000 names are already listed for investigation as the result of the work of the secret service men in investigation of the sending of bombs through the mail recently.

Every one of the individuals on this list is under surveillance, liable to instant arrest whenever the authorities so decide.

Such prompt and effective action on the part of the federal secret service brings a thrill of pride to any American heart, but the pride should not breed a false sense of security. We are menaced by a thing of some size, how great nobody can tell exactly. It is also carefully organized, and backed by considerable funds.

It must be sought out root and branch, followed unrelentingly and punished without mercy.

America offers to every alien within her gates the opportunity for work, for education and for advancement. There is nothing to stop him but his own ignorance, laziness or vicious tendencies. The man who will not attempt to avail himself of what America offers, and seeks only to destroy her so that in future she may have nothing to offer to anybody, should be promptly denied the privilege of American freedom. If he is an American citizen he should be put behind the bars. If he is an alien he should be deported.

The good, the decent and law-abiding citizens are immensely in the majority. They do not have to submit to anarchy at all. They have only to exercise their powers within the law, and anarchy is done.

Either anarchy must cease in wholesome fear of law, or law must cease in coward fear of anarchy. The time has come for every citizen to decide.

Hindenburg has handed in his resignation as commander of the German armies. He says the time has come when he would like to retire. Probably there are a lot of other prominent German officials who feel the same way since they heard about that article in the peace treaty which dealt with the punishment of those responsible for the way the war was conducted.

We are accustomed to little signs on the gasoline stations saying 'Free Air.' Now England announces the air free for civilian airplaning. It is strange when you think of it, how the air stays free, when it really goes up higher than anything else.

If Uncle Sam has got to accept a mandate for some liberated nation, Hedjaz will probably do as well as any. We can get along with any nation that has 'jaz' in it.

Taken by and large, this modern radical movement seems intended to give capitalistic weak-ends to the proletariat.

FEW NEW PHRASES COINED

In That Respect the Recent Appalling Conflict May Be Considered to Have Been Tame.

In one particular it was not the greatest war in history.

We know that more men lost their lives, more soldiers were in battle and more money was spent than in any previous war.

But colossal as was the conflict in other respects, it was quite tame in its supply of new words and new phrases. "Girard" writes in the Philadelphia Press.

Hardly a word came into the language as the result of four years of appalling disaster. Only a few new expressions were born.

Even in the matter of war songs this German war was different. It was more sentimental and less militant than some great wars of the past.

Of all new English phrases coined since that memorable August, 1914, "Over the top," is by far the most frequently quoted and the most significant.

It is now in general use to express an emphatic finish. But what other did we get?

Of course, we had the "Hun," but that was old, and it lacked the punch of originality. It didn't carry the hatred and sting that went with what our ancestors called the Hessian, nor the fathers baptized the Copperhead.

"Pacifist" was entirely new, but that lacks the venom that signified "Tory" of the Revolution and even yet carries on with that phrase in this country.

The South got many a wild curtain call with its telling phrase, "Northern Mudsills."

"Doughface" was a highly expressive title that still reeks with the campaign against slavery and was first used by John Randolph of Virginia.

Oliver P. Morton's graphic phrase, "waving the bloody shirt," had a whole hostful of meaning behind it and really summed up a great national issue.

Since the Mexican war "Greaser" has been a fighting word from the mouth of the Rio Grande to the Gulf of California.

Gen. Ben Butler's interpretation of the status of a negro during the Civil war gave an entirely new meaning to the word "contraband."

No unit of this new and greater American army had a title that will stick longer than did that of the "Bucktails."

No general in any of the allied armies won a sobriquet to match that of "Stonewall" Jackson of the Confederate hosts. A presidential campaign in 1840 was keyed upon the slogan, "Tippecanoe and Tyler, too," the "Tippecanoe" being old General Harrison, who won the name and his fame in Indian forays.
