JUST SWIMMING

Many a woman never expects to venture farther into the water than up to her chin, and so thinks it useless to learn to swim. Far from true! Swimming is one of the greatest beautifiers known.

Plenty of men do not like deep-water bathing, and would rather see their friends drown than get their ankles wet. But for all that, any man who wants to be in the pink of physical condition—or the tan, if you prefer—has only to swim regularly and he will find his wish gratified.

Out of the millions who enjoy swimming, only a very small percentage will ever be called upon for any lifesaving deeds. That is the last reason in the world for learning to swim. But any one who loves fun, who enjoys the cooling effect of the water, and who would be glad to improve both health and looks, should learn to swim.

Man has not mastered air flight without the use of machinery, but it is possible to enjoy as exhilarating a feeling as must delight the bird who floats on his own wings if one will put laziness and timidity aside, and learn the buoyancy of water and the delightful ease with which the body may be moved through it.

Even if one never acquires courage to venture out into the cool blue water beyond his depth, he can still learn to swim in water where bottom can be touched by the exploring toe. But the truth is, that when one has learned to swim he has also learned that to the swimmer no water is deep—it is only good to swim in.

Mexico can't be all bandits and bullets and Carranza. The situation along the Rio Grande is likely to give Americans a wrong perspective. Huge quantities of goods are being exported from the United States to Mexico, and the demand is steadily increasing. That argues a general economic and political improvement, in spite of appearances.

The Hindenburg statue is still standing in Berlin, though the Germans have stopped paying fancy prices for the privilege of driving nails into it. Why not bring it over here and let Yankees drive a few nails into Hindy on the Fourth?

An eight-hour aerial mail service has been installed between New York and Chicago. At the present rate of development, pretty soon the public won't have to use the slow telegraph wires.

Root beer may yet become the national drink. It was Elihu Root, you remember, who first advised the brewers that two and three-fourths per cent beer was permissible under prohibition.

Porto Rico is going to hold a big Fourth of July celebration. That's fine, as long as Porto Rico shouts for American, not Porto Rican, independence.

After the peace treaty is disposed of the American people can get busy on the job of determining what percentage of alcohol makes beer intoxicating.

Former Citizens Visit—Mr. and Mrs. Claud H. Vhers of Portland passed through the city today on their return from Lebanon. Mr. Vhers was for many years one of the active farmers and stock men of Linn county. He stated that he never saw crops better in the county.
