WHY THEY JOIN

The way boys are flocking to enlist in the army is reminiscent of the old chap in "The Jucklins" who said, "I believe in the Book from kiver to kiver, but I can't help fightin' roosters."

Everybody, even the boy who is joining the army or reenlisting, hopes that the war is over, and that some agreement may be arrived at which will prevent wars in the future. But for all that, the boys can't help joining the army.

It is partly the love of adventure which never sleeps very soundly in the heart of youth. It is partly the great advantages which are offered in the way of experience and education to the boy who enlists now.

Formerly army life meant much military instruction, and much boredom in times of peace. The soldier of these days has the advantage of all that purely military life has to offer. He can also acquire a fine education in almost any branch he chooses and be paid while learning, which is an inducement no college or university can offer.

The motor transport corps offers all that the other branches of the service offer, and yet has the special appeal for the boy who loves to tinker with and to drive automobiles. Better yet, the men are to have their spare time for themselves, free from fatigue duty.

It is no wonder the boys are flocking in thousands to sign the papers. It is the opportunity of a lifetime.
