

An Attractive Figure

For women who keep busy in their own home—or elsewhere. Retain the lines of your figure and enjoy the comfortable support of a Ferris Corded Corset. Light, flexible boning, assisted by rows of cording make it equally good for working or resting.

Your daughter's growing form requires the training of a Ferris Corset Waist to give her a figure of natural beauty in later years.

SCRIPT CAME BACK

Librettist Writes Humorously of His First Play.

Producer Seemingly Had Forgotten All About Work He Pronounced "Great," and It Was Finally Returned to Composer.

"I never shall forget," said Bide Dudley, author, "the first time I tried to write for the stage. It came about like this: J. J. Rosenthal was staging a musical show with the intention of taking it West. Jake and I had come into contact often, as I liked his brand of cigars. At this particular time he needed a lyric for his show. We met on Broadway and he gave me a cigar.

"Bide," he said, "can you write me a song?"

"No," I replied.

"Good!" Jake almost yelled. "You're the very guy I'm looking for. All the others say they can write me dozens of songs. That's the trouble with them. They're too cocksure. When you get home tonight write me a lyric on 'Love.' Do I get it tomorrow?"

"Well, you know, Jake," I replied, "originally I was a telegraph operator and then a grain buyer out in Kansas. However, if you want to take a chance, I'll write the lyric."

"That night I fixed up a couple of verses and the next day I handed the finished product to Jake and ran. He phoned me later to say it was great and that it would go into the show immediately. It did. The show went broke on the second stop out.

"Jake didn't put all the blame on the song—that is, he said it might have been something else that exploded the show. At any rate, he didn't lose faith in me. Three months later he handed me an old moth-eaten comedy script and suggested that I make it a musical play. I demurred, but he gave me a cigar, and so I went to work. A widely-known composer called in to do the score, and we labored together a month. Then we submitted the new musical comedy to Jake.

"It's great," he said. Then he threw the script in his desk and we went forth expectantly. For a whole year I inspected the billboards closely, but saw nothing that would indicate that Jake had produced the piece. At the end of six months more I received the script in the mail. A man had bought the desk at an auction and found the play in the drawer. All he asked of me was that I return him the price of the postage. I thought that reasonable enough, so he got his stamps back."

Sunlight Not Good Germicide.

Sunlight as a germicide proves to be less efficient and reliable—at least in temperate regions—than has been commonly supposed. In his experiments in Algiers, M. de Laroquette has found that only prolonged or direct exposure to sunlight destroys bacteria, and that its action is chiefly confined to dry surfaces where the bacteria are fully desiccated. Bacteria in liquids are affected only by very intense light, and this only at slight depth. White light is more effective than colored, blue being slightly more powerful than other colors. Bacteria are chiefly killed by luminous rays, and ultraviolet rays have failed to show the bactericidal action so generally credited them. At best, sunlight acts only at the surface, while layers of fat or mucus prevent even the slight ordinary penetration.

By Naval Precedent.

It is a curious anomaly of the senior service, says the London Daily News, that an officer who attains, as Lord Jellicoe and Sir David Beatty have just attained, the rank of admiral of the fleet, is required by precedent to retire from active command. The rule may have been designed to eliminate old seadogs who had become too ancient to bite, but it seems singularly foolish to permit its application to men like Jellicoe and Beatty. By the unprecedented rapidity of his promotion, Sir David has finished his sea career at the age of forty-eight—in the prime of his life. The army is free from this senseless precedent, for the rank of field marshal—which is the military equivalent to the rank of admiral of the fleet—was, of course, held during the war by both Lord French and Sir Douglas Haig.

Tip From Little Brother.

A youngster who heard an older sister say she would like to "shake" a boy who was rather attentive decided that he had solved the problem for her. He had a little girl playmate, who, when she tires of him, runs home.

After receiving such treatment the other day, he entered the house and said: "Mother, I know how sister can shake John. Mary knows how to do it and she'll tell her."

"How does Mary do it?" mother asked.

"Oh, she just runs away. That's how you can shake anybody."—Worcester (Mass.) Evening Post.

Saw a Resemblance.

Little Andrew was playing in the yard, in which there is a coop for his pigeons. All pigeons were inside with the exception of one which was walking up and down in front of the door. Andrew ran up to his mother in great excitement and said:

"Mamma, is that one a collector?"

Whereat his mother asked him why. Then Andrew said:

"Well, he can't get in."
