CORN OIL COMING INTO GENERAL USE

By Edwin F. Bowers, M. D., author of "Alcohol, Its Influence on Mind and Body," and "Bathing for Health."

Ever since the Indians passed the information along to our old Puritan fathers and their equally puritanical wives in America have acknowledged that corn is a wonderfully nutritious and sustaining food. It is only within recent years, however, that we have come to realize that the oil in the germ of the corn, hitherto regarded as a by-product, is one of the most valuable of all the ingredients of the corn.

COMEDY BURTON HOLMES TRAVELOGUE

YOU May Be In- terested In What WE Are Doing!

As has been announced by the newspapers of Albany, we have bought the KENTON CASH STORE at Third and Lyon streets. It is our intention to so conduct the business that there will be news in the store every day of interest to the people of this vicinity. It will be for the people to decide whether or not our announcements are of interest to them. We therefore ask you to give the announcements attention until your mind is made up on this point.

We realize that our success in the store depends on our ability to make the store meet the needs of the people. At the present time we are getting the stock well in hand preparatory to publishing prices which we hope will prove of interest. We are also making plans for new departments which we will announce.

For a number of years the KENTON CASH STORE has been popular with the people of Albany and vicinity and, if possible, we will make it more so. From day to day our announcements and your visits to the store will give you the opportunity to decide the matter correctly.

Fred Dawson The Rexall Store

For recent experiments have proved that corn oil, pound for pound, is one of the most readily converted and assimilated of all fats, and that it has very high nutritive qualities by reason of this fact.

Corn oil is a true "made-in-America" product, inasmuch as its use has been confined largely to America—although it is quite conceivable that, before many years, there will be a very great demand created for it abroad—especially in the British Isles, in all the northern countries of Europe, and, perhaps, even in the olive-growing countries themselves.

Better Than Olive Oil

Corn oil has unique qualities, which give it a great advantage over olive oil in many respects. For one thing, its method of preparation preserves it from rancidity to which olive oil is so liable, for fermentation processes have been overcome in the presentation of corn oil.

In mixing salad dressing it has been found that corn oil is equal to the best olive oil, and very much better than ordinary olive oil—and at a cost not to exceed one-half the cost of the highest grade of imported olive oil. Indeed, many discriminating South-Europeans, including Italians, now prefer the sweet bland corn oil to olive oil.

Corn oil blends perfectly with the various ingredients used in "building" a French or a mayonnaise dressing—making a perfectly smooth and homogeneous combination.

One interesting fact in connection with this use of corn oil is that corn oil does not congeal as readily as does olive oil. It remains fluid down to a temperature of 14 degrees, whereas olive oil becomes cloudy and solidifies at a temperature of 32 degrees. This makes a very great difference, for crisp coldness is one of the first requisites of a salad.

But an even more desirable property in corn oil is its correspondingly higher burning point. While butter burns at about 250 degrees, goose grease at 400 degrees, lard at 425 degrees, cottonseed oil at 535 degrees, olive oil at 600, corn oil does not burn until it is heated up to 650 degrees Fahrenheit.

It is the low burning point of butter, lard and other fats and oils that fills the house with smoke and stench and gives all the neighbors wireless information as to what the family is to have for dinner.

Keeps the Food Juices Sealed in. The great advantage of a higher burning point in frying steak, fish, onions and other odoriferous foods, is that the higher temperature used with corn oil makes it possible to cook the food in a shorter space of time, and thereby prevents the toughening of the meat, the drying out of the fish, and the diffusion of the perfumes not of Araby from other comestibles.

Also, the use of corn oil at its unusually high temperature 'seals in' immediately the surface juices of the food, retaining thereby the flavor.

aroma and succulence which would otherwise be lost or else disseminated all over the neighborhood. The food is cooked in its own juice, instead of being saturated with burnt grease that would give the food a flavor and odor anything but desirable.

This makes it possible to fry doughnuts, fish, onions or any food product in one pan and at one time—if it were necessary—without any one product taking up the odors or flavors of any of the other products.

This is carrying American efficiency into the kitchen with a vengeance—right into the heart of the frying pan. All of which makes for the conservation of life and health—also for the increase of happiness and the satisfaction of being alive.
