FOOD-COST IS FUNDAMENTAL

The declaration made by the railroad brotherhoods, that either their wages must be raised again or the cost of food must be lowered, may have an unpleasant sound to the rest of the public, but its effect should be good. For it involves a tacit recognition of a fact too often lost sight of the public, but its effect should be ment strike at the root of this cost-of-living disease instead of dealing with mere symptoms, it will get nowhere. The same truth is forced home by the Pennsylvania coal men, who point out that it is a question of higher wages or lower food—either alternative will suit them.

As a matter of fact, the latter alternative is better in every way, because it is fundamental. Recent experience has proved the futility of merely raising wages as a means of maintaining living standards. When wages are raised in one occupation, soon they have to be raised in another and so on, until all have been brought up to the new standards. By that time the process has to begin again. And so it goes in an endless round, wages and salaries always trying to reach the vanishing end of the rainbow of comfortable living.

It is logical enough. As soon as wages are raised in any industry, the products of that industry cost more. This means that the men working in other industries have to pay more for their earnings to buy the products of this industry. So their wages have to be raised. Then everybody else has to pay more for the products of that industry.

But back of all this symptom-treating is the fundamental industry of agriculture, the industry which exists before all others, on which all others depend. If foodstuffs can be held down, there will not be the same need of raising pay in the other industries. For the basic need of everybody will be met. And when it is met with out undue hardship on anybody, the prices of all other commodities are kept down accordingly.

It is understood, of course, that in this process no fair-minded citizen wants to do any injustice to the producers. The farmers and gardeners and cattlemen and herdsmen must make a living. But few people doubt that the producers could be assured of adequate returns without keeping wholesale and retail prices up to their present level. It is to be remembered, too, that if the prices of other products could be lowered, the producers would not need so high a rate of profit themselves in order to supply themselves with the various necessities and comforts of life.

THE CHIMING PHONE

Persons of delicate nervous organizations who are disturbed by the sharp jangling of the telephone bell should be delighted to know that an Albany, N. Y., man has invented an apparatus which will ring chimes instead.

Of course it may be a little difficult to decide whether it is the telephone or the Westminster clock on the mantel which is ringing, but that could be obviated by having the telephone play some appropriate tune, like "I Hear You Calling Me," or "I Can't Get 'Em Up," or "Ring out, Wild Bells."

One thing is certain. Considering most telephone service, music which "hath charms to soothe the savage breast," is eminently the medium to employ in connection with the telephone.

Tangent Items

Tangent, Aug. 8—E. E. Awbery and wife have returned from a visit at the home of his mother who lives in Eugene.

M. F. Wood, wife and children of Corvallis passed through Tangent on their way to their farm a few days ago.

Lyle Scott of Corvallis is visiting at the home of his grand parents who live a few miles south of Tangent.

Miss Baiyel of Tangent visited with Miss Oleta Wood a few days last week.

Mrs. Emma Harritt of Eugene visited with her father, mother and brothers last week.

Miss Thella Wood, who visited relatives last week has returned to her home in Corvallis.

J. F. Scott of the Corvallis post-office visited with his parents one day last week. He has just returned from Chicago where he attended the national meeting of the Macca-bees. He reported a fine trip and a pleasant time while gone.

David Anderson spent Sunday visiting at the home of M. F. Wood and family in Corvallis.

M. F. Jinks, wife and daughter Miss Florence have gone on an extended visit to Newport. Mr. Jinks has been in rather poor health lately.

Archie Campbell has moved with his family to Eastern Oregon to make their future home.

Farmers around Tangent have been over run with work for the last month caring for their large crop of hay. They have succeeded in saving it in good condition. The fall grain is all cut and it has been found to be of good quality and above an average in quantity. The large threshing outfits have started up and they have quite a long run ahead of them.

Gardens which have been well cultivated look well and vegetables are plenty.

Pastures are fast drying up which causes a decrease in the flow of milk which will continue until the fields are open for pasture.

All kinds of berries are quite plenty now and will be for a while yet.
