superintendent of the Portland division north of Ashland; H. A. Hinshaw general freight agent of the Portland division and R. R. Rankin, a railroad attorney for the company. The parties all spoke optimistically of the future possibilities of the Willamette valley and the abundant crop of the season.

Homesteading in Montana

The following version of living in Montana is reason enough for the exodus of settlers from that forsaken country:

By George M. DeVane

My visions of wheat and homesteading are over;

I'll live like a hermit on dry land no more. Hauling water all summer, buying feed in the fall, Will try the patience and puer of both short and tall.

We are frozen out, dried out, and beaten by hail. Overcharged by the merchants. —No wonder we fail. We have snow in the winter, and rain in the fall, But when moisture is needed we have none at all.

We have hauled off the rocks and broke up the sod, But through failure of crops we are all broke, by God. Now what will we do without credit or gold? Bid farewell to the desert and go back to the fold?

We left the Willamette account of the rains, And came to Montana—homesteaded the plains. But alas, we regret having come to this state, So, I guess we'll go back before it's too late.

Lyman Palmer is gone with his family of four; Carl Huston goes and will return nevermore. Clarence Cox goes also, with his wife and two boys, And Geo. Cummings will be there, though not making much noise.

E. G. Howard has gone to the Valley for hay; But when he gets there I think he will stay. Why should he return to the scene of defeat? For on the Willamette there is plenty to eat.

Now last, but not least, there is Horace Armstrong, Who will join friends in the Valley fore long. Good luck to you, Horace. May you see many Junes, And grow bounteous crops of Italian prunes.

Winter is coming, and with it the snow, I would not stay here, but I've no place to go. So, Heavenly Father, please send down your manna, For I'm going to stick, by heck, to Montana.

FORD IS AWARDED

egan May 12. It consisted of 11 farmers and one roadbuilder.

A feature of the case was the production by the defendant of more than 20 witnesses from the Mexican border to testify to raids, murders and other acts which to the mind of Tribune counsel established the fact that there was a condition of anarchy along the border.

Professor Testifies
Professor Reeves of the University of Michigan, appearing as an expert, testified that many of the Ford utterances corresponded with the teachings of recognized anarchists. He gave definitions of the word "anarchist" which contained no reference to bombthrowing, but which denoted one who works to overturn the government.

Counsel for the defendant argued that government exists only so far as it can enforce its decrees and protect the lives and property of its citizens, that without force there can be no government and that where there is no government there is anarchy. Therefore, they sought to establish that in opposing the recruiting of soldiers Mr. Ford opposed government itself and, by the same token, sought to establish anarchy.

Bishop Gives Views
Therefore, they sought to establish that in opposing the recruiting of soldiers Mr. Ford opposed government itself and sought to establish anarchy. Hence, "Ford is an Anarchist," they said. The defense throughout was one of justification and the right of fair comment.
