YANKS IN RUSSIA BUILD WITH SPEED

75 Miles of Railways Replaced by Engineers in 2 Months

Soroka, Russian Lapland, June 30 via London, Aug. 2. — (Correspondence of The Associated Press.) — Pushing forward daily into territory of the Bolsheviks and often under fire, the American railway troops on the Murman front in two months transformed 75 miles of dynamited and burned bridges and railway, wrecked and destroyed by retreating Bolsheviks, in to a workable railway which they manned, operated and maintained.

To these troops the British command gives much of the credit of the seventy-five mile advance toward Petrozavodsk. In the contingent were 36 officers and 675 men, comprising the 167th and 168th companies of railway troops as a special battalion under Major E. E. MacMoreland, Kansas City, and every kind of railroad equipment from a superintendent to a section hand.

The Yanks worked so fast that the Bolsheviks according to prisoners taken; believed that they had miraculous machinery for tracklaying and adjustable bridges which they dropped in as they went along. It was all done by a gang under Captain C. J. Jones, of Paterson, N. J., who in Alaska and Latin-American jobs was nicknamed "Hurry-up Jones". The men worked seventeen hours daily with the enemy right ahead and the British artillery right behind awaiting construction. There were also small battles and skirmishes in many battle sidings where on several occasions the construction and also the train's crews were under fire.

On May 19, while building a bridge under sharp fire, the Yanks were surrounded by Bolsheviks skipping through the woods and dynamiting the bridge three versts in the rear. On the way back to repair the bridge the Yanks were again attacked at close range but managed to escape.

The shop detachment, under Captain C. E. McMillan, of South America and Panama, formerly from Omaha, had to transform junk pile equipment into workable rolling stock.

Then the Yanks, under Captain H. G. Odell, former assistant and superintendent at Santa Fe, built and operated an eight-mile street railway in Murman. Under Lt. Chas. B. Tuttle, they operated and manned an armored train. Railroad men who formerly drew high pay in Boston, Pittsburgh or Indiana shared in making these railway enterprises a Yankee success.
