"More Americans Should Own Their Own Homes." Somewhere in the heart of every man is the desire to be independent. Independence is the measure of one's standing in the community. The first step along the road to independence is to own one's home. The man who owns his own home is the respected, the trusted man in every community.

One of the largest employers of labor in the country ordered a canvas of his factories to determine what percentage of his employees owned their own homes. At the same time he urged all employees in the establishment to become home owners or home buyers.

Sound logic prompted this action. The responsible man is the valuable employee. The HOME OWNER has a deeper sense of civic pride. He is established; he is responsible; he is interested in everything that tends toward the peace and security and up-building of the community.

The example set by one manufacturer will be followed by others. It will daily become more requisite to a man's securing responsible employment that he owns his own home.

There is little excuse for a man not owning his own home. The great Liberty Loans have instilled into the American people lessons of thrift that will endure through the coming days of peace. Every man can and should own his own home.

There is no appeal from the man who seeks a position that is treated so lightly, by private and public employer alike, as the appeal which comes from the man who has everything to gain and nothing to lose. The INDEPENDENT MAN always

THE car with two or three or four different brands of tires reflects on the owner's ability to buy judiciously.

People who try Firestone Gray Sidewall Tires are no longer in the ranks of the tire doubters.

They know that at least one make of tires has more miles of wear. They know that the name Firestone carries assurance and that the tires are uniformly good.
