Newspaper With One Subscriber.
It has been the inflexible custom in the imperial family of Japan, says a writer in East and West News, to withhold all newspapers and magazines from its members until they attain their eighteenth year; but the rule was waived in the case of Hirohito, the present crown prince. Four months before his imperial highness entered upon his eighteenth year he was allowed to begin reading a specially prepared journal.
This curious newspaper was edited by an official of the imperial household and printed in the imperial printing office. It was set in special type and printed on thick, Japanese paper. The reading of it did not require a great deal of time, for it was of small size and on a single sheet.
